missile defence cooperation with India, as part of its effort to deepen the bilateral strategic partnership, the Pentagon has said, asserting that New Delhi is a "key element" in America's Indo-Pacific strategy.

The Pentagon's announcement in the 81-page 'Missile Defence Review' report, released by President Donald Trump, gains significance in view of India placing a $5-billion order to purchase S-400 air defence system from Russia, for which the US has publicly expressed its displeasure.

Noting that the threats posed by offensive missile capabilities are no longer limited to a few regions around the world, the Pentagon in its report said there were now a number of States in South Asia that are developing an advanced and diverse range of ballistic and cruise missile capabilities. "Within this context, the US has discussed potential mis-

Pacific strategy. The report identifies missile projects by Russia as major threats. It does not give an about its defence of India. The US stance to defence system. Given the neighbourhood to Delhi several approaches expressed in a missile defence system, particularly High Altitude system, popu-
