JAPANESE ATOMIC BOMBS SURVIVOR GROUP AWARDED NOBELTHIS YEAR

Nihon Hidankyo wins peace prize

OTT UMMELAS & HEIDI TAKSDAL SKJESETH October 11

AJAPANESE GROUP of atomic bomb survivors was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for their efforts to ban such weapons at a time nuclear rhetoric has reached post-Cold War peaks.

The grassroots movement, Nihon Hidankyo, receives the prize "for demonstrating through witness testimony that nuclear weapons must never be used again," the Oslo-based Norwegian Nobel Committee said in a statement on Friday.

Next year will mark 80 years since two American atomic bombs killed an estimated 120,000 inhabitants of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan. Survivors of the calamity, who are known as the Hibakusha, came together to form the movement for raising awareness of the disastrous consequences of nuclear weapons on human life.

"The extraordinary efforts of Nihon Hidankyo and other representatives of the Hibakusha have contributed greatly to the establishment of the nuclear taboo," the committee said referring to a de facto norm against the use of such arms. "It is therefore alarming that today this taboo against the use of nuclear weapons is under pressure." The organisation will receive an $1.1 million award.

Last month, Russian President Vladimir Putin said Russia

■ While overall number of atomic weapons is falling, the number of such warheads deployed with missiles & aircraft has grown

will revise its nuclear doctrine to include a response to "aggression" by non-nuclear states that is supported by other nuclear powers. That followed his warnings to the US and European countries against allowing Ukraine to strike deep inside Russia using Western long-range high-precision weapons. Ukraine and its allies have not threatened Russia with nuclear arms. "Our message is to Putin and to all world leaders to uphold the international norm against the use of nuclear weapons," head of the committee Jorgen Watne Frydnes said in an interview. "These are weapons that should never be used again."

While the overall number of atomic weapons is declining, the number of such warheads deployed with missiles and aircraft has grown and will probably pick up speed in the next years in an "extremely concerning"trend, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute said in June.

In January, the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists announced it is keeping the Doomsday Clock at 90 seconds to midnight for a second year. This is the closest it's ever been, tied with 1953, the year the US and Soviet Union began testing hydrogen bombs

- an even more powerful weapon than an atomic bomb.

"It's been a pipe dream to imagine that we'd ever win a Nobel Prize," Hidankyo's co-Chairperson Toshiyuki Mimaki, told reporters in Hiroshima. "The abolition of nuclear weapons, which we have been calling for, will gain more momentum through this."

Last month, North Korea released its first photos of a facility to enrich uranium for atomic bombs, showing its leader Kim Jong Un touring a plant at the center of the programme. A top South Korean official warned earlier that North Korea might conduct a nuclear test around the time of the November US presidential election. There are also fears that Iran is developing nuclear weapons.

Nihon Hidankyo has provided thousands of witness accounts, issued resolutions and public appeals, and sent annual delegations to the United Nations and a variety of peace conferences to remind the world of the pressing need for nuclear disarmament. Its award joins a string of previous awards "to champions of nuclear disarmament and arms control," the committee said.

Japanese PM Shigeru Ishiba called the award "extremely significant," speaking at a press conference in Laos. It's the eighth time the Nobel Peace Prize is given to work against nuclear weapons. Among the previous laureates, the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons, a coalition of NGOs in 100 countries, received the accolade in 2017.

In 1982, the prize was awarded to Alva Myrdal and Alfonso Garcia Robles "for their work for disarmament and nuclear and weapon-free zones." The board received 286 nominations for this year's prize, out of which 197 were individuals and the rest organisations. Their names are kept secret for 50 years. -BLOOMBERG Amazon prefers solar and wind energy to nuclear power in Asia

SING YEE ONG & ISHIKA MOOKERJEE October 11

AMAZON IS CURRENTLY only looking at wind and solar to offer green power for projects in Asia, even as global technology companies begin examining nuclear generation to supply energy-hungry data centres.

"We're going where we can procure today, and that's renewables" in the region, said Ken Haig, APAC regional head of energy and environmental policy at Amazon Web Services. "Is it possible to procure nuclear power in this part of the world? Not yet."

This is in contrast to the US, where tech titans including Amazon and Microsoft are turning to nuclear energy to fuel their power-hungry data centers. The technology provides low-carbon electricity around the clock, a key benefit over intermittent wind and solar. Microsoft has secured the full output from the idle Three Mile Island nuclear plant in Pennsylvania once it restarts in 2028.

Earlier Amazon had bought a nuclear-powered data center in the state. While Asia remains one of the most challenging geographies to acquire green power, it's the

"There's no question that in this part of the world renewables remain the most available, scalable, affordable and mature technology that we can turn to today," Haig said. —BLOOMBERG

T20 WC: Shafali Verma must look to get back to boundary-hitting best

VINAYAKK MOHANARANGAN New Delhi, October 11

UNDERTHE FLOODLIGHTS in Sharjah, a young Indian batter was making her mark as a fearless strokemaker. Length ball from Ayabonga Khaka – one of the best pacers in the world was swatted over midwicket for four. Next ball, slightly fuller, the ball went flying over cover. Another full ball, a bit straighter, was whacked over midwicket.

In the space of four deliveries, 16-year-old Shafali Verma hit three fours in the Women's T20 Challenge in November 2020. Sure enough, her innings would come to an end in the same over as she kept going for the boundaries, but ended up getting caught at deep midwicket.But at 16, the world was witnessing the start of something special from the swashbuckling Haryana batter.

Fast forward four years, Shafali will be back in Sharjah in a match with much higher stakes. A match that will decide India's future at the ICC Women's T20 World Cup. India will be desperately hoping their match-winner comes good at the top of the order, if they are to stand any chance of stopping the juggernaut that is Australia.

In the four years since that exhibition series – one where she had the best strike rate among all batters albeit with cameos - Shafali has been

Nihon Hidankyo wins peace prize

OTT UMMELAS & HEIDI TAKSDAL SKJESETH October 11

AJAPANESE GROUP of atomic bomb survivors was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for their efforts to ban such weapons at a time nuclear rhetoric has reached post-Cold War peaks.

The grassroots movement, Nihon Hidankyo, receives the prize "for demonstrating through witness testimony that nuclear weapons must never be used again," the Oslo-based Norwegian Nobel Committee said in a statement on Friday.

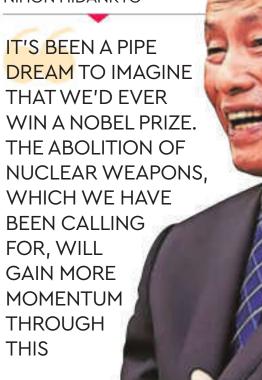

Next year will mark 80 years since two American atomic bombs killed an estimated 120,000 inhabitants of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan. Survivors of the calamity, who are known as the Hibakusha, came together to form the movement for raising awareness of the disastrous consequences of nuclear weapons on human life. "The extraordinary efforts of Nihon Hidankyo and other representatives of the Hibakusha have contributed greatly to the establishment of the nuclear taboo," the committee said referring to a de facto norm against the use of such arms."It is therefore alarming that today nuclear weapons is under pressure." Amazon prefers solar and wind energy to nuclear power in Asia

AMAZON IS CURRENTLY only looking at wind and solar to offer green power for projects in Asia, even as global technology companies begin examining nuclear generation to supply energy-hungry data centres.

"We're going where we can procure today, and that's renewables" in the region, said Ken Haig, APAC regional head of energy and environmental policy at Amazon Web Services. "Is it possible to procure nuclear power in this part of the world? Not yet."

This is in contrast to the US, where tech titans including Amazon and Microsoft are turning to nuclear energy to fuel their power-hungry data centers. The technology provides low-carbon electricity around the clock, a key benefit over intermittent wind and solar. Microsoft has secured the full output from the idle Three Mile Island nuclear plant in Pennsylvania once it restarts in 2028.

Earlier Amazon had bought a nuclear-powered data center in the state. While Asia remains one of the most challenging geographies to with a combined estimated

VINAYAKK MOHANARANGAN New Delhi, October 11

UNDERTHE FLOODLIGHTS in Sharjah, a young Indian batter was making her mark as a fearless strokemaker. Length ball from Ayabonga Khaka – one of the best pacers in the world – was swatted over midwicket for four. Next ball, slightly fuller, the ball went flying over cover. Another full ball, a bit straighter, was whacked over midwicket. In the space of four deliveries, 16-year-old Shafali Verma hit three fours in the Women's T20 Challenge in November 2020. Sure enough, her innings would come to an end in the same over as she kept going for the boundaries, but ended up getting caught at deep midwicket.But at 16, the world was witnessing the start of something special from the swashbuckling Haryana batter.

Fast forward four years, Shafali will be back in Sharjah in a match with much higher stakes. A match that will decide India's future at the ICC Women's T20 World Cup. India will be desperately hoping their match-winner comes good at the top of the order, if they are to stand any chance of stopping the juggernaut that is Australia.

In the four years since that exhibition series – one where she had the best strike rate among all batters albeit with cameos – Shafali has been

Nihon Hidankyo has provided thousands of witness accounts, issued resolutions and public appeals, and sent annual delegations to the United Nations and a variety of peace conferences to remind the world of the pressing need for nuclear disarmament. Its award joins a string of previous awards "to champions of nuclear disarmament and arms control," the committee said.

Japanese PM Shigeru Ishiba called the award "extremely significant," speaking at a press conference in Laos. It's the eighth time the Nobel Peace Prize is given to work against nuclear weapons. Among the previous laureates, the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons, a coalition of NGOs in 100 countries, received the accolade in 2017.

JAPANESE ATOMIC BOMBS SURVIVOR GROUP AWARDED NOBEL THIS YEAR

Nihon Hidankyo wins peace prize

OTT UMMELAS & HEIDI TAKSDAL SKJESETH October 11

AJAPANESE GROUP of atomic bomb survivors was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for their efforts to ban such weapons at a time nuclear rhetoric has reached post-Cold War peaks.

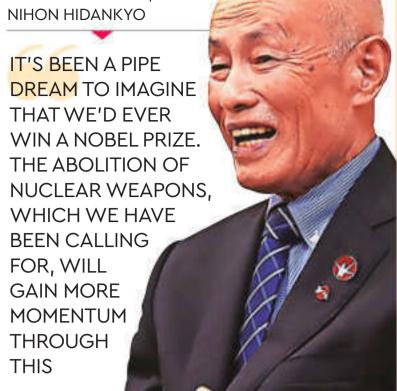

The grassroots movement, Nihon Hidankyo, receives the prize "for demonstrating through witness testimony that nuclear weapons must never be used again," the Oslo-based Norwegian Nobel Committee said in a statement on Friday.

Next year will mark 80 years since two American atomic bombs killed an estimated 120,000 inhabitants of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan.Survivors of the calamity, who are known as the Hibakusha, came together to form the movement for raising awareness of the disastrous consequences of nuclear weapons

on human life. "The extraordinary efforts of Nihon Hidankyo and other representatives of the Hibakusha have contributed greatly to the establishment of the nuclear taboo," the committee said referring to a de facto norm against the use of such arms."It is therefore alarming that today this taboo against the use of nuclear weapons is under pressure." The organisation will receive an $1.1 million award.

will revise its nuclear doctrine to include a response to "aggression" by non-nuclear states that is supported by other nuclear powers. That followed his warnings to the US and European countries against allowing Ukraine to strike deep inside Russia using Western long-range high-precision weapons. Ukraine and its allies have not threatened Russia with nuclear arms.

"Our message is to Putin and to all world leaders to uphold the international norm against the use of nuclear weapons," head of the committee Jorgen Watne Frydnes said in an interview. "These are weapons that should never be used again." Atomic Scientists announced it bombs, showing its leader Kim 50 years.

While the overall number of atomic weapons is declining, the number of such warheads deployed with missiles and aircraft has grown and will probably pick up speed in the next years in an "extremely concerning"trend, the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute said in June.

"It's been a pipe dream to imagine that we'd ever win a Nobel Prize," Hidankyo's co-Chairperson Toshiyuki Mimaki, told reporters in Hiroshima. "The abolition of nuclear weapons, which we have been calling for, will gain more momentum through this."

Last month, North Korea released its first photos of a facility to enrich uranium for atomic

JAPANESE ATOMIC BOMBS SURVIVOR GROUP AWARDED NOBEL THIS YEAR

Nihon Hidankyo wins peace prize

OTT UMMELAS & HEIDI TAKSDAL SKJESETH October 11

AJAPANESE GROUP of atomic bomb survivors was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for their efforts to ban such weapons at a time nuclear rhetoric has reached post-Cold War peaks.

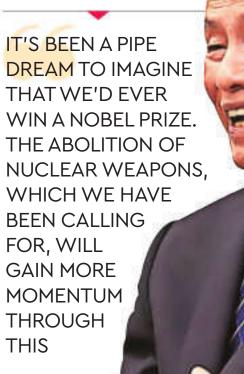

The grassroots movement, Nihon Hidankyo, receives the prize "for demonstrating through witness testimony that nuclear weapons must never be used again," the Oslo-based Norwegian Nobel Committee said in a statement on Friday.

Next year will mark 80 years since two American atomic bombs killed an estimated 120,000 inhabitants of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan. Survivors of the calamity, who are known as the Hibakusha, came together to form the movement for raising awareness of the disastrous consequences of nuclear weapons on human life. "The extraordinary efforts of Nihon Hidankyo and other representatives of the Hibakusha have contributed greatly to the establishment of the nuclear taboo," the committee said referring to a de facto norm against the use of such arms."It is therefore alarming that today this taboo against the use of nuclear weapons is under pressure." The organisation will receive an $1.1 million award.

Nihon Hidankyo has provided thousands of witness accounts, issued resolutions and public appeals, and sent annual delegations to the United Nations and a variety of peace conferences to remind the world of the pressing need for nuclear disarmament. Its award joins a string of previous awards "to champions of nuclear disarmament and arms control," the committee said.

Japanese PM Shigeru Ishiba called the award "extremely significant," speaking at a press conference in Laos. It's the eighth time the Nobel Peace Prize is given to work against nuclear weapons. Among the previous laureates, the International Campaign to Abolish Nuclear Weapons, a coalition of NGOs in 100 countries, received the accolade in 2017.

Amazon prefers solar and wind energy to nuclear power in Asia

SING YEE ONG & ISHIKA MOOKERJEE October 11

AMAZON IS CURRENTLY only looking at wind and solar to offer green power for projects in Asia, even as global technology companies begin examining nuclear generation to supply energy-hungry data centres.

"We're going where we can procure today, and that's renewables" in the region, said Ken Haig, APAC regional head of energy and environmental policy at Amazon Web Services. "Is it possible to procure nuclear power in this part of the world? Not yet."

This is in contrast to the US, where tech titans including Amazon and Microsoft are turning to nuclear energy to fuel their power-hungry data centers. The technology provides low-carbon electricity around the clock, a key benefit over intermittent wind and solar. Microsoft has secured the full output from the idle Three Mile Island nuclear plant in Pennsylvania once it restarts in 2028.

VINAYAKK MOHANARANGAN New Delhi, October 11

UNDERTHE FLOODLIGHTS in Sharjah, a young Indian batter was making her mark as a fearless strokemaker. Length ball from Ayabonga Khaka – one of the best pacers in the world – was swatted over midwicket for four. Next ball, slightly fuller, the ball went flying over cover. Another full ball, a bit straighter, was whacked over midwicket. In the space of four deliveries, 16-year-old Shafali Verma hit three fours in the Women's T20 Challenge in November 2020. Sure enough, her innings would come to an end in the same over as she kept going for the boundaries, but ended up getting caught at deep midwicket.But at 16, the world was witnessing the start of something special from the swashbuckling Haryana batter.

Fast forward four years, Shafali will be back in Sharjah in a match with much higher stakes. A match that will decide India's future at the ICC Women's T20 World Cup. India will be desperately hoping their match-winner comes good at the top of the order, if they are to stand any chance of stopping the juggernaut that is Australia.

In the four years since that exhibition series – one where she had the best strike rate among all batters albeit with cameos – Shafali has been through a lot. It's also been four years since she was in a T20 World Cup final with the senior team, playing a stellar role in India's run to the title clash in Australia – another tournament where she was top of the strike rate charts overall, going at 158.25.

She has led the Indian U19 side to a World Cup title. She has crossed plenty of milestones along the way, most of them to do with the "youngest" to do something or the times she is still only 20. The 2024 World Cup, how-

JAPANESE ATOMIC BOMBS SURVIVOR GROUP AWARDED NOBEL THIS YEAR

Nihon Hidankyo wins peace prize

OTT UMMELAS & HEIDI TAKSDAL SKJESETH October 11

AJAPANESE GROUP of atomic bomb survivors was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for their efforts to ban such weapons at a time nuclear rhetoric has reached post-Cold War peaks.

The grassroots movement, Nihon Hidankyo, receives the prize "for demonstrating through witness testimony that nuclear weapons must never be used again," the Oslo-based Norwegian Nobel Committee said in a statement on Friday.

Next year will mark 80 years since two American atomic bombs killed an estimated 120,000 inhabitants of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan.Survivors of the calamity, who are known as the Hibakusha, came together to form the movement for raising awareness of the disastrous consequences of nuclear weapons

on human life. "The extraordinary efforts of Nihon Hidankyo and other representatives of the Hibakusha have contributed greatly to the establishment of the nuclear taboo," the committee said referring to a de facto norm against the use of such arms."It is therefore alarming that today this taboo against the use of nuclear weapons is under pressure." The organisation will receive an $1.1 million award.
