ASHA meets AI: AIIMS study set to map breast cancer patterns

ANKITA UPADHYAY NEW DELHI, DECEMBER 17 THE BACKBONE of India's primary healthcare system in remote villages and towns, Accredited Social Health Activist (ASHA) workers may soon add another crucial task to their regular house calls. As part of an ambitious study, currently underway at the New Delhi-based All India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS), ASHA workers may soon be deputized to collect vital data to help Artificial Intelligence (AI) identify breast cancer risk factors and patterns specific to Indian women. The first point of contact for health-related needs in far-flung areas across the country, ASHA workers handle tasks like vaccination and health reviews in the remotest of locations in India. Guided by a structured questionnaire, these workers are expected to conduct detailed conversations with families about their personal health status and hereditary diseases during their regular visits. All data collected by ASHAs will then be uploaded online, via the tablets they have been given to carry out their official duties. The study, being led by Dr Jitendra Meena, Associate Professor, Preventive Oncology, National Cancer Institute (NCI), AIIMS, seeks to improve early breast cancer detection rates and reduce mortality, which remains among the highest globally. According to Globocan, an online database that provides global cancer statistics, breast cancer comprises 10.6 per cent of all cancer deaths in India. The AIIMS initiative is one of the first under the Central government's flagship scheme to establish three Centres of Excellence (CoE) in AI with a focus on healthcare, agriculture and sustainable cities. The premier institute has secured a funding of Rs 300 crore to lead the healthcare CoE in partnership with the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT)-Delhi. Besides focusing on breast cancer, AIIMS and IIT-Delhi will work on various national programmes to address non-communicable diseases, including diabetes, cardiovascular diseases and stroke. Underlining the importance of the initiative, Dr Krithika Rangarajan, Associate Professor, Radiology, Institute Rotary Cancer Hospital (IRCH), AIIMS, Delhi, says, "By the time the majority of breast cancer cases are detected in India, they have already progressed to stage three or four. At these stages, it is difficult to treat them. AI will help us on two fronts. First, it will interpret the data to identify women who need mammograms (specialised X-rays to check for signs of breast cancer), while reassuring others with low-risk profiles." Second, she says, AI tools will help less skilled professionals interpret images much faster. "This will ensure advanced breast cancer screening even in the remotest of areas, which are always short of trained radiologists. Otherwise, a lot of time is lost in diagnosis," Dr Rangarajan adds. Explaining how the initiative will work, she says that data of all the women who got tested for breast cancer at both the NCI-AIIMS in Jhajjar and PGI Chandigarh over a period of five years will be fed into the AI model for analysis to predict their risk of developing the disease.
