Slow cooking: Calorie count on menu

FSSAI's 2020 menu compliance rule yet to take off despite deadline extension

VAISHALI DAR New Delhi, November 21

THE FOOD SAFETY and Standards Authority of India's (FSSAI) initiative for every restaurant dish to have full nutritional information listed alongside both physical and online menus seems to be a slow-cooking one.

While the regulation, mandatory for restaurants with a central licence or outlets at 10 or more locations, was notified in November 2020 and outlets were required to comply with the norms by January 1, 2022, with a deadline extension to July 1 later, compliance is far from taking effect.

In response to an email sent by FE, FSSAI said the authority is still in the process of developing an online mechanism to help licensing authorities and food safety o?cers to digitally identify the food business operators (FBOs) who need to comply with the above regulation.

The FSSAI had ordered to display the calorific value (in kcal per serving and serving size), and food allergens on menu cards, boards or booklets to ensure transparency in menu labelling, and promote healthier eating habits among Indians by providing full nutritional information.

The National Restaurant most ordered dish with over 7.45 Association of India (NRAI) said they have passed on the FSSAI the third-most ordered dish, with directive to its members. "As

But neither the food delivery apps Zomato and Swiggy, nor biryani brands like Biryani by Kilo, Bikkgane Biryani, Biryani Blues or Behrouz Biryani display the calorific value of the food items on their online menus. Food delivery apps Zomato and Swiggy did not respond to queries mailed by FE.

For consumers to become more health-conscious, these regulations offer clarity and trust, fostering a more informed and responsible dining culture. However, these menu labelling regulations place an additional burden on small and mediumsized food establishments that may struggle to comply.

"The rigid requirements could stifle creativity in menu design and impose extra costs, potentially leading to increased prices for consumers. These regulations, though well-intentioned, risk creating unnecessary complexity in an industry already grappling with numer-

Even as implementing accurate nutritional profiling can be complex, particularly for a diverse menu, the need for precise ingredient measurements and standardisation across all outlets adds a layer of operational complexity.

"The process of nutritional analysis, whether done in-house or through third-party services, involves significant costs. For QSRs, especially startups, this can be a financial burden. But transparency is key, there is a risk that customers may focus solely on calorie counts or other metrics, potentially overlooking the overall nutritional value of a balanced meal," said Nidhi Singh, co-founder of QSR chain Samosa Singh, which has over Popular brands Haldiram's, Domino's and Bikanerwala do not display the caloric value of food items on online/offline menus, while brands like Pizza Hut and McDonald's India (West & South) have duly complied with the new guidelines. The McDelivery app has integrated this regulation into the product development process well before it became a requirement. "As an ongoing process, we monitor and comply with all regulatory mandates, including the recent government requirements, which have been fully met. The brand works diligently to not only meet but often exceed these standards, further enhancing customer awareness," said the company spokesperson.

Wow Momos operates 650 stores nationwide and sees this change as a step forward."Health has been a top priority so we introduced wheat momos and will soon launch our range of gluten-free momos in the next quarter. We are also in the process of making the nutritional information upfront in menus, bills and displays itself," said Murali Krishnan, CMO & cofounder of Wow! Momo Foods.

Global surveys suggest over 75% of street takeaways and restaurant food is unhealthy. The Indian Council of Medical Research's (ICMR) latest dietary guidelines estimated that 56.4% of the total disease burden in India is due to unhealthy diets.

Bumrah's quick thinking: The edge India needs

SRIRAM VEERA Perth, November 21

It was a light-hearted question that gave an insight into the mind of India's stand-in skipper Jasprit Bumrah on the eve of the opening Test of the Border Gavaskar Trophy series here. "If all things go well, when Rohit Sharma comes back for the Adelaide Test, will you tell him, 'Rohit bhai, rehne do, I shall carry on the captaincy?!'Bumrah smiled and said, "No no, I can't tell Rohitbhai that. I am always in the present moment.Let's see what happens in the future".

It's that present-moment awareness that is Bumrah's standout feature. It's not some diplomatic throwaway pressconference line, it's his philosophy as a bowler, player, and something he has chatted about at length in the past.

It's exactly what this vulnerable Indian team needs to do if they are to survive the Perth trial by fire. It's what makes Bumrah the ideal replacement for the regular skipper Rohit. Go out there and think on their feet that could perhaps be the best way out for this team that is teeming with absences, injuries, and lack of form. Bumrah has no recent baggage of defeats nor does he have a tendency to zealously over-prepare. Bumrah's inclination to rely on instincts could well be the way out for this young vulnerable team of men facing their most arduous challenge yet.
