Starting 35 from cases January, the in numbers surged to 66 cases in April, February with March and also showing significant spikes at 34 and 53 cases, respectively. [1] Health officials attribute this rise, in part, to the onset of the monsoon season, a time when waterborne diseases tend to proliferate due to compromised sanitation and water quality. The demographic most includes affected low-lying residents, hostelers, and individuals who frequently dine out, exposing them to varied hygiene conditions and potentially contaminated food and water sources.
