ANC below 50% after partial count

SOUTH AFRICA POLLS

AP / JOHANNESBURG

Partial results in South Africa's national election put the long-ruling African National Congress at below 50% of the vote as counting continued Thursday, raising the possibility that it might lose its majority for the first time since it swept to power under Nelson Mandela at the end of apartheid in 1994.

With around 20% of votes counted and declared, it was only a partial picture after Wednesday's election. The final results of a vote that could bring the biggest political shift in South Africa's young democracy were expected to take days, with the independent electoral commission saying they would be delivered by Sunday, although they could come earlier.

Some analysts said the early results already presented a never-before-seen picture with regards to how far the long dominant ANC was below the 50% mark in the early results.

"I think we are seeing a massive change in South African politics," political analyst Prof. Susan Booysse said on SABC TV, the national broadcaster.

The electoral commission was projecting a 70% voter turnout in this election, up from the 68% in the last national election in 2019. The ANC won 57.5% of the vote in that last election, its worst performance to date.

This election was seen as a direct referendum on the unbroken three-decade rule of the ANC.
