INFRASTRUCTURE DEAL

Biden pushes EV chargers as energy expenses spike

He says investment will go a long way to curbing planet-warming carbon emissions

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Washington, November 17

PRESIDENT JOE BIDEN is highlighting billions of dollars in his giant bipartisan infrastructure deal to pay for the installation of electric vehicle chargers across the country, an investment that he says will go a long way to curbing planet-warming carbon emissions while creating good-paying jobs.

Republicans are criticising Biden for being preoccupied with EV tech at a time when Americans are contending with a spike in gasoline and natural gas prices when Americans are contending with a spike in gasoline and natural gas prices. Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell took the Senate floor Tuesday to make the case that "the Biden administration doesn't have any strategic plan to snap its fingers and turn our massive country into some green utopia overnight"

"It's a big deal," Biden declared as he signed the bill into law at a White House ceremony earlier this week. Republicans — even some of those who voted in favour of the infrastructure package — are criticising Biden for being preoccupied with electric vehicle technology at a time families are staring down the barrel of skyrocketing heating bills, and the Democrats' response is to go to war against affordable American energy. White House press secretary Jen Psaki has stressed that the administration is looking at "every tool in our arsenal" to combat high gasoline prices, saying that Biden and his economic team are "quite focused" on the issue.

Psaki said the administration has asked the Federal Trade Commission "to crack down on illegal pricing" and is engaging with countries and entities abroad like OPEC on increasing supply. The GM plant that Biden will visit was slated to be closed in 2018 as the automaker tried to shed excess factory capacity to build sedans as buyers shifted toward SUVs and trucks. But the plant, which built cars with internal combustion engines since it opened in 1985, was rescued a year later and designated "Factory Zero" to build zero-emissions electric vehicles.

Currently, the 4.1-million-square-foot plant, which straddles the border between Detroit and the enclave of Hamtramck, is making pre-production versions of the electric GMC Hummer pickup truck.

Next year it will start making a Hummer electric SUV. The plant will start cranking out the Origin, an electric vehicle for GM's Cruise autonomous vehicle subsidiary, in 2023, and an electric Chevrolet Silverado pickup at an unspecified date.

The plant won't see much direct impact from the infrastructure spending, but it will benefit from $7.5 billion designated to help build an electric vehicle charging network.

Biden wanted $15 billion to build 500,000 chargers, and hasn't given a number for how many could be constructed for half that amount. It's likely $7.5 billion won't be enough. The International Council on Clean Transportation says the US will need 2.4 million charging stations by 2030 if 36% of new vehicle sales are electric.

Currently there are about 45,500 charging stations nationwide with about 112,000 plugs. Biden is hoping to do even more to promote EVs, including a provision for a $7,500 tax credit for consumers who buy EVs through 2026 that's been floated as part of his proposed $1.85-trillion social services and climate bill.

Tesla's Solar Roof a big part of Musk's long-term plan

November 17

TESLA CEO ELON MUSK first unveiled his concept for a Solar Roof in October 2016. At the time, he was trying to sell investors on the idea of Tesla acquiring SolarCity, a company where he was chairman and his cousin was the CEO. I've written several stories about the controversial acquisition, the shareholder lawsuit, the first customers to get the Solar Roof, and Musk's fixation with the product and its rollout.

Now someone in my neighborhood in Oakland, California, is getting a Tesla Solar Roof on their house. When I can walk past the project and see its progress every day, it makes Tesla's foray into this business feel much more real — and nudges me to contemplate how the solar division might figure in Musk's empire over the long haul.

For years, the rule of thumb was that the more electricity you used, the more it made sense to switch to solar power. In the San Francisco Bay Area, solar was more common in the hotter, outlying suburbs where residents had high energy use thanks to larger houses, central air conditioning units and swimming pools. It wasn't that common to see solar panels in Oakland, where the Pacific Ocean fog typically acts as a natural coolant and many dwellings don't have air conditioning.

But the effects of climate change are becoming increasingly apparent, and homeowners ers are choosing to go solar for other reasons, too. Tesla wants to be their one-stop shop for clean energy: An electric car in the driveway, a Solar Roof, and a Tesla home battery called a Powerwall to tie it all together.

"I think long-term Tesla Energy will be roughly the same size as Tesla Automotive," Musk said during an earnings call in July 2020. "The energy business is collectively bigger than the automotive business."

On Tuesday morning, as I rode my bike to the nearby BART station, I passed about eight guys standing around outside the house, getting ready for the day's work. I'm not revealing the address out of respect for the homeowner's privacy, but this is a small house, roughly 1,100 square feet in size. Big crates full of roofing material, marked with the Tesla logo, were parked on the street in front.

Some of the shipping labels on the cardboard boxes indicated they'd come from Buffalo,

New York — where Tesla's Solar Glass roofing tiles are made — while other shipping labels noted boxes that had come from China. Tesla cars are so common in California that it's no longer unusual to see one. But a Solar Roof project will get attention.

It's still a relative novelty, and like any construction project, it's a hive of noisy activity.

For years, the existential question about Tesla was: did consumers really want to buy electric cars? And could Tesla make them in high enough volume before going bankrupt? The answers turned out to be yes and yes. Now Musk's company faces a new set of questions, including: can Tesla, which has sold many people cars, sell them on a full home ecosystem? Despite high costs, hassles with permits, supply chain snarls, a labor market squeeze and long installation times, demand apparently is, dare I say, through the roof.

With limited options, Uber embraces carbon offsets in LatAm

UBER HAS SET OUT to be carbon neutral by 2040, but the ride-hailing company has picked a route in parts of Latin America that is fraught with challenges.

Since February, the US group has offered customers in Mexico an "Uber Planet" option. For an additional 0.37 Mexican pesos per kilometer, they can contribute towards the purchase of carbon credits for reforestation projects and a wind farm in Oaxaca to offset the emissions caused by their rides.

Carbon offsets are controversial. When countries and companies find it difficult or expensive to cut greenhouse gas emissions, they sometimes use offsets to meet climate goals. These allow buyers to keep polluting while paying someone else to take climate-friendly action.

Uber's own climate report last year said the company avoided buying offsets as a primary strategy, instead emphasizing subsidies for its drivers to switch to electric vehicles (EVs). Offsets "effectively pay to make it someone else's responsibility" and have "weaknesses", including verification challenges, Uber's report said.

In parts of Latin America, however, the company told Reuters a transition for drivers to zero-emission EVs was "impractical" in the near term, given nascent EV markets there.

So in Mexico, Colombia, Ecuador and Costa Rica it is using the Uber Planet offset scheme, alongside efforts to encourage drivers to switch to EVs, it said.
