Sri Lanka's former prez Gotabaya returns home

Gets special security, bungalow from Govt

Sri Lanka's former President Gotabaya Rajapaksa has been granted special security and a state bungalow for accommodation on his return home from Thailand where he had spent months long house arrest over the country's worst military crisis, officials said on Sunday.

Rajapaksa, 73, was accepted a warm welcome as he returned to Colombo from Thailand and spent his first night in his new home at the state bungalow on Sunday.

The former president returned to live in his private residence at Nibbanaya in Colombo's eastern suburb of Zingapitiya. However, state security arrangements prevented him from going to his private residence where he has been based ever since leaving the presidency in 2018, officials said.

He will not be involved in political activities until the end of the year, according to the ruling SLFP-led government.

After being welcomed by members of the ruling Sri Lanka Pradesha Samaja (SLFP) party Rajapaksa left the airport in a motorcade heavily guarded by armed soldiers and was taken to the state bungalow where a state-appointed bungalow was provided to him, officials said.

Rajapaksa will be living in a state bungalow close to Wickramasiri Senarathna in Colombo while a large security contingent will be deployed to maintain security in the area. The Daily Mirror newspaper reported.

Former president was constitutionally granted a bungalow, personal security and staff after they leave office. The ruling government of the airport said that the former president arrived in the country at around 11.30 PM on Friday.
