Poco F3 GT: Everything, plus a gaming twist

The Xiaomi offshoot brings on the next mid-range all-rounder and it's ready to play

MALA BHARGAVA

It seems a long time ago since Xiaomi spun off the Poco brand. In actual fact, it was only in August 2018 that the F1 was launched, but in smartphone years, Poco fans have had a rather long wait for the next phone in the F line-up. There was an F2 but it wasn't the affordable formula that Indian users have come to expect, so it wasn't launched here. Now, we have the Poco F3 and that is quite an affordable package starting at ₹ 26,499 and is also distinctive in several ways.

Muscular and heavy This time, the new F series phone has a gaming twist to it. The design signals this straight off. The back on the carefully styled F3 GT is in a smooth matte finish with interesting lines and accents, including around the camera lenses paired with a notification light. It looks muscular and heavy duty without being in-your-face about it. There's Gorilla Glass 5 on the back — and front — and a metal framing.

This device looks quite well built and premium, with a design that's distinctive without being flashy - at least not in its more subtle black colour-way. You could use it without a case but it is slippery-smooth and also a little heavy so it isn't difficult for it to slip.

Our review unit is the Predator Black, which suits it very well. The other colour is Gunmetal Silver which I haven't seen in person. What's also distinctive physically about this phone is that it has a duo of trigger buttons for gaming on the right edge — or on top if you turn the phone to landscape in readiness for game-play. These click-slider buttons don't really come in the way if you want to use the phone for other functions, but during a gaming session, are to be mapped to certain actions. The sides of this phone are not just slapped together around the display, but have very thought out contours meant to aid grip and holding the phone during gaming.

Nice and bright The F3 GT has a 6.67-inch Full HDR+ screen with the bezels all around optimised for gaming and a little dot in the centre for the front camera. Perhaps this should have been top left so it doesn't come into view while gaming, but it's small enough not to be a bother. The screen has a 120Hz refresh rate which should improve the gaming experience. The display is otherwise very nice and bright (1300 nits at peak) and supports HDR10+.

The chipset used here is the MediaTek Dimensity 1200, quite the flavour of the month right now. It's perfectly fine for practically everything. Some gamers report that the device gets stressed with the heavier processor-intensive games. Not being into anything but the lightest of games, this isn't something I tested. The processor has a choice of three RAM and storage configurations — or rather, you do. The RAM used is LP-DDR4X and storage is UFS 3.1.

On top of Android 11, Xiaomi's MIUI 12.5.2 is optimised for the Poco brand. There's almost no bloatware, though there's a Cleaner app I would be highly wary of and the inevitable and annoying GetApps which must be tamed right away.

This phone has a big 5,065mAh battery with 67W fast charging, more than any phone in India right now. It's not just a lot of battery power but also well-optimised and handled to give long battery life. There are lots of other things that show attention to detail has been paid. The fingerprint sensor is on the power button — something I actually always welcome. There's IP53, dust and splash protection. It has JBL-tuned stereo speakers and support for lots of formats. It's also a 5G phone supporting two bands. So a bit of an all-rounder.

Camera features The main camera is a 64MP and with it we have an 8MP ultra-wide and a 2MP macro. The front camera is a 16MP. The cameras are fine. You get somewhat saturated images, although many like it that way. There's also some over-sharpening which makes an image look artificial. One wouldn't recommend buying the F3 GT for the cameras but for all the other hardware chops together at the reasonable prices offered.

Price: ₹26,999 for 6/128; ₹28,999 for 8/128; ₹30,999 for 8/256 Pros: Thought-out design and ergonomics, premium looking, good build, special gaming stylisation and buttons, big battery with staying power, great display, good performance, great pricing Cons: Somewhat heavy, cameras average

Ellenbarrie to invest ₹250 crore in AP plant

SHOBHA ROY

Kolkata, August 11 Promoters of Ellenbarrie Industrial Gases Ltd, an integrated industrial and medical gases company, have re-acquired 51 per cent stake for an undisclosed sum from Air Water Inc, a Japanese industrial gases conglomerate.

The company, which has witnessed a surge in demand for medical gases in the wake of the pandemic, is investing ₹250 crore to set up a 600 tonne per day capacity plant at Kurnool in Andhra Pradesh for producing oxygen, nitrogen and argon.

The company claims to be currently debt-free.

Its existing production facilities are located at Kalyani, Uluberia, Kharagpur and Panagarh in West Bengal; at Visakhapatnam in Telangana; and Hyderabad in Andhra Pradesh.

Ellenbarrie, which clocked a turnover of ₹250 crore in FY-21, is expecting to double its turnover to ₹500 crore in the next two years.

Realme Buds 2 Wireless: Noise cancellation on a tight budget

Shutting out the world is the strength of these comfy, inexpensive earphones

MALA BHARGAVA

By the name you would think the Realme Buds 2 Wireless is a set of earbuds. That isn't the case. It's a neckband style set of earphones, not a hundred per cent wireless but of course with cables connecting the earbuds to the neckband. It's a familiar enough type of product but one that we are tending to cover less frequently as they tend to be so very similar, specially at the low price-point at which they can be bought.

The Buds 2 (as we'll call them for this review) cost just ₹ 2,299 and we might have skipped them except for the fact that they offer a few really nice things for their price. But let's start from the beginning — what do they look like?

Sturdy and comfortable The Buds 2 neckband comes in a 'base' grey and a yellow-and-black. The one with yellow cables and black everything else is bound to be more funky and interesting, but the grey has its own charm.

The material used is some sort of softer synthetics and is really quite classy. Neckbands fluff tend to look every bit as cheap as they are, but this one doesn't. It's very sturdy-feeling and don't look like they'll damage easily, even the cables. They grey could get a little dirty though, so keep them or yourself clean!

These buds will work with any phone, not necessarily a Realme. It's comfortable to wear and very light. The only problem I have with them is that the cables tend to fluff up around my face and are always in my peripheral vision, sometimes in the way, sometimes tickling my face — not a welcome intrusion, I must say. The buds look big, but fit very comfortably. I didn't feel I needed to change the soft ear-tips for another size. The back of the earbuds are magnetic and snap together to turn the music off, which starts up again when you separate the buds.

As you don the neckband, the right side has a remote with three buttons. The other side, evening it out, is the battery. To map the buttons to their actions, you need to download the Realme Link app. Open it up and you'll find various settings you can make. The first of these is for noise cancellation, the most impressive aspect of these buds. You can choose full

ANC, transparency mode or just normal, which is nothing in particular. The moment you wear these, the whole whooshing noise of everything around you, the whir of a fan, the hum of various machines, the general consistent white noise of life around, becomes suppressed. This is not just from the seal of the buds, but their actual cancellation.

If you enjoy closing yourself in a bit and tuning out the world, these do a surprisingly good job. I did stop a moment to think back on how at one time, Bose was the only brand we thought could manage noise cancellation. And Bose products, which we barely see anymore, used to cost the earth. Well, for just ₹2,299 you can now actually have quite a degree of noise cancellation. It's really rather nice to see the democratisation of certain kinds of technology.

All the controls In the app, you can choose whether you want the button to cycle through all three modes or less. In the app, you also have some sound enhancements. There's a volume enhancer, which really isn't needed. And there are three EQ presets: Bass Boost, Dynamic and Bright. I would advise sticking with the Dynamic. These buds use 13.6mm drivers and sound quite good but there's something up with the way the bass sounds. It's booming and present, but not refined.

To boost it further, the preset suppresses other frequencies and makes it sound closed and muffled. On the other end of the spectrum, high frequencies, specially vocal, can sound shrill and hurt a little. Overall, the sound signature for these buds needs some tuning, but it can sound pleasant as well and many would be perfectly satisfied with it, specially if they just want thumping bass regardless. The codecs supported include AAC, SBC and Sony's LDAC.

You can map the buttons via the app, turn on game mode and choose to auto answer calls. Phone calls sound fine with these earbuds. The app has quite a bit more than similar ones do, actually. Connectivity is through Bluetooth 5.0. The connect is held quite well and doesn't give problems beyond the expected. This product has IPX5 water resistance. A splash or two won't hurt. Battery life is good enough and there's quick charging to top it up in any case.

Price: ₹2,299 Pros: Good noise cancellation, sounds good for the price, comfortable, strong build, looks nice Cons: Cables fluff out near face, bass a bit thumpy, EQ presets not so useful
