Managing Stress for bank Employees

Vinod Chandrashekhar Dixit
Freelance Journalist, Writer &
Cartoonist
(dixit�त्रकार@yahoo.in)

The following ten suggestions are designed to help you to deal with the stress you may be experiencing and also in increasing job satisfaction and lead to a balanced life.

Stop taking on too much

The most common cause of stress related to work is attempting to do too much with the resources and time at your disposal. There is a limit to everyone's capacity. If you repeatedly make commitments beyond your capacity, you're pushing yourself too hard. Better scheduling and enough self-assertion to say "no" when that is appropriate can help.

Check it out with your Doctor

Persistent signals that might mean psychological stress are sometimes due to physical problems. So check it out with your doctor. If no medical problems are found, ask the physical for suggestions on handling stress or tension.

Balance work with play.

Schedule time for recreation and hobbies that are relaxing and enjoyable. Of course, the regularity of work can occasionally help a person through emotional situations that are hard to bear - like the death of a loved one, separation or divorce.

Loot a little

Some active people who feel guilty about occasionally just sitting and doing nothing should find themselves a chance to leave the art of loafing.

The noise and bustle of modern life may keep us in a constantly stimulated state contributing to a feeling of anxiety.

Take a break. A walk, for example, can bring peace and perspective. Find the time to "make friends" with yourself.

Get enough sleep and rest.

Nobody can be in the best of health for long without enough sleep and rest. Adults vary in the hours of sleep they need. Probably the best test of whether you are getting enough sleep is how you feel.

If you wake refreshed and energetic, you are no doubt getting required rest. But if you frequently feel tired, the solution may well be as simple as going to bed earlier and being as regular as possible in your sleep habits. Frequent inability to sleep should be discussed with a physician.

Work off tensions.

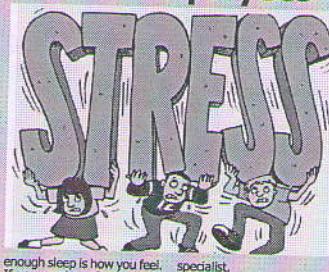

When we're upset or angry, we can try to blow off steam or work off our feelings with physical exercise.

Enjoying some activity such as playing tennis, jogging, swimming or other exercise helps to relieve tension and makes it easier to face and handle problems more calmly.

Getting some regular exercise is also a great way to keep yourself in good physical condition.

Speak out your troubles.

It helps to get it off your chest sometimes by confiding worries to a sympathetic friend. When what appears to be a serious problem starts to weigh you down, it's wise to discuss it with your physician, a religious counselor, or with an understanding member of your own family. Often another person can help you to see your problem in a new light. This may be the first step towards a constructive solution. However, if your problems seem to be getting out of hand, your doctor may want to recommend a specialist.

Learn to accept what you cannot change.

Many of us get upset about circumstances which are truly beyond our control. Sometimes we even try to make people over to suit our own ideals and then feel frustrated when we find that this cannot be done. We can look for the best in others while realizing that nobody is faultless.

Get away from it all.

When you are going around in circles with a problem or a worry, try to divert yourself. As simple as it is to go to the movies, watching a movie, reading a story or visiting a friend may help. There's no harm in running away from a problem long enough to catch your breath and regain the composure you need to come back and face the problem.

Avoid self-medication.

If you should need medication, your physician may prescribe some which temporarily help you to relax without affecting your mental agility. But avoid self-medication. There are different types of tranquilizers or sedatives available for various purposes. A doctor can prescribe the amount and type that's safe for you, if necessary. competitive and dynamic world with a human-centric approach.

Gujarat's Kamdhenu Aayog almost defunct

AHMEDABAD: Within two years of its formation, the Rashtriya Kamdhenu Aayog (RKA) for the "conservation, protection and development of cows and their progeny" has almost become defunct.

The central government has not appointed any chairman after the term of Vallabhi Kathiria ended in February this year. According to the RKA, kamdhenu.gov.in, has also become non-operational. Sources associated with the RKA said that after the end of Kathiria's term as chairman, it has become non-functional. "To my knowledge, the RKA has not been functional since February this year. I have learnt that it is being attacked by AWBI for the time being," said a source who was closely associated with the aayog. "However, I am not sure what the government is aiming to do regarding the RKA." When asked about the fact that the RKA is in shutdown now, Kathiria said, "Even with the prevailing Covid-19 situation and other hurdles, we did well in propagating the message of cow protection." He added: "The RKA was instrumental in creating the model for cow-based entrepreneurship in the country as well." Earlier this month, Lok Sabha member A M Arif highlighted that the aayog was not doing well.
