The manipulators of mine craft

An entire village in Tamil Nadu's Krishnagiri district has shifted its base to a protest venue outside a quarry, condemning the pollution of their natural resources and livelihoods. This is no isolated issue. The Public Accounts Committee has ordered an audit using drones in order to track down violations, reports P.V. Srividya

A paragraph in the Accountant-General's report caught the attention of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC). It cited violations in the Department of Geology and Mining (DGM). Chasing the concerns raised, the PAC, headed by K. Selvaperunthagai, ordered a complete audit using drones to arrive at the total station measurement (angle and depth) in each of the 337 quarries (rough stone and granites) in Krishnagiri last month.

"It was a small paragraph on mining violations. In relation to the A-G's report, we also received a lot of petitions flagging violations that had occurred not just in the last 10 years but also those that kept recurring. When officials denied the violations, we asked why the A-G's report and the petitions received would lie," Mr. Selvaperunthagai told The Hindu.

Many quarries had over-extracted, and many operated illegally after expiry of environmental clearance and without the consent to operate (CTO), he said. "The power supply to the quarries/crushers past their lease period was not disconnected allowing them to operate illegally. So we asked the officials to tally the electricity bills paid before and after the CTO period to arrive at the violations," he said. The officials who had presided over those violations, in service or retired, shall be made answerable, Mr. Selvaperunthagai added.

While the PAC was accounting for the revenue loss and leakage, a village in Denkanikottai was articulating the realities under the dusty shadow of a quarrying cluster. Last week, residents of Koratagiri village in Thandarai panchayat in the Denkanikottai block began vacating their homes to live in a community forest, protesting against stone quarries, captive crushing units and the trucks that were polluting their air, water and fields. The protest came after a community ban on the movement of quarry trucks that were dumping dust on their fields and their homes. The ban had shut down the operations of eight quarries and their crushing units in neighbouring Panchakshipuram for over six months.

Collective grievance

Koratagiri's collective grievance was the same as any village affected by quarries. Its primary waterbody, Sanathkumar lake, and the check-dam feeding its livestock and crops contaminated by quarry dust; stone dust settling on community grazing land; premature death of livestock; jamming of

Gaping void: Many quarries have over-extracted, and many have operated illegally after expiry of environmental clearance and without the consent to operate. A quarry at Koratagiri in Denkanikottai in Krishnagiri district. N. BASHKARAN underground farm motors and fracturing of house walls by vibrations from explosions; wilting of horticultural crops from dust, rendering farming unremunerative; and ailments from emissions of over 200 trucks daily were among the common complaints. In February this year, an Industries Department G.O., issued by Chief Secretary V. Irai Anbu, cited the "adverse remarks" on officials by courts. It fixed "monthly targets" for inspections by Village Administrative Office (VAOs), Revenue Inspectors, Tahsildars and others to curb illegal mining.

The quarrying industry has thrived on the remoteness of the venture, and zero monitoring by departments, understaffed and with scattered responsibilities. The mining plan of a quarry proponent includes an environment management plan, which is forwarded to the State Environment Impact Assessment Authority (SEIAA) for environmental clearance. The District Pollution Control Board issues a 'consent to operate', based on the plan, without which a mining lease is not granted. The mining plan details the quantum of extraction, the nature of blasting, the explosives used, noise control, dust suppression systems, norms for curbing emissions from trucks, formation of a green belt around quarries and crushers and workers safety.

In the wake of the protest in Koratagiri, a Pollution Control Board official claimed that it was the job of the DGM to inspect quarries over which the Board had no jurisdiction. Asked about the dust suppression systems in stone crushers, pollution from the trucks, green belt, the ambient air quality and water quality inspections, noise from the use of explosives, and crushing, overhauling and loading, the official said, "Noise comes under the Petroleum and Explosives Safety Organisation (PESO), and not the PCB, but generally the crushers would have all those in place and also those norms were only advisory in nature."

According to an official of the DGM, the matters of power of explosions and mines safety (including labour accidents) come under the purview of the Directorate of Mines Safety, Bengaluru, which would conduct periodic inspections, and not under the Department.

As the buck stopped everywhere and nowhere, the peace committee meeting held at the Collectorate showed an embittered local community trying to make sense of the rules as they voiced their grievances.

A mining lease begins with the issue of A1 Notice (a notice of intent to quarry lease for a 'porampokku' land) by the Tahsildar. The notice is displayed at the Village Administrative Office inviting objections to the proposal within 15 days. Thereafter, a VAO's 'letter of consent' is issued upon surveying lands to verify if the proposed quarry site was within the optimal distance from habitations, waterbodies and high-ways as per the Minor Minerals Concession Rules. The VAO's letter specifies that "no objections have been received from the adjacent patta-holders" and "quarrying would bring revenue to the government and generate local employment".

Technically, the objections are invited but only indirectly; the invitation is never directly communicated to the adjacent patta-holders. In the case of quarries located in remote villages, with a predominantly illiterate population dependent on daily wage work and farm labour, with the few educated employed far away, the 15-day window is seen as unreasonable.

"They did not take my consent before leasing out the adjacent 'porampokku'," says Munindra of Koratagiri.

Forged signature

A resident sought to know how his signature was 'forged' in a no-objection letter for a quarrying lease of an adjacent patta land. "I never signed it," he said. The Collector replied there was no requirement for a no-objection letter from an adjacent patta-holder. However, the VAO's letters of consent, filed along with the mining plan from other blocks in the district, paint a different picture. The residents also contested the veracity of public hearings held for the quarries, since they were never informed. Here too, the Pollution Control Board schedules public hearings on weekdays, allowing little chance for daily wage-earning communities to take part at them.

A quarry cannot be located within 300 metres of 'notified habitations'. "A homestead will not qualify as a 'notified habitation' in our revenue record," says a VAO.

The A-G's report cited by the PAC bears out the truth on the ground. For a district with 300 quarries, the DGM operates with less than seven staff members. According to an official, quantity assessment is not possible for individual application. Inspections are done after issues are flagged.

Onus on the RTO

A transit permit is issued for moving blasted stones from a quarry to the crusher and then to their destination on trucks. The permit is issued on an application declaring the quantum of extracted mineral, and royalty is levied on the basis of the declaration.

There are 300 quarries, and verification of the declared extraction is not possible every time for issue of transit permits, says an official source. "It is the responsibility of the Regional Transport Office (RTO) and the police to check vehicles for transit pass," says the official.

However, the police cannot weigh the quantum of the mineral in transit. At best, seizures are made for lack of transit permits, and not for discrepancy in the actual and documented extraction. Typically, stones are blasted in a quarry four or five times a week and a transit pass is issued for 12 days.

In the intermittent inspections carried out, 34 quarries were fined for various violations, including over-extraction and extraction beyond the lease period. Most of the ₹320 crore levied in fines are on appeal. Until a year ago, the revenue earned by the government here was a mere ₹46 crore. This year, it increased to ₹83 crore, including the penalties collected, says an official source. Yet, the wide gap between the penalties and the revenue earned persists.

A perusal of the PCB orders since 1986 on stone crushers (which are invariably sited in the vicinity of quarries) shows a systematic reduction in the optimal distance criteria for the location of quarries/crushers based on studies commissioned solely on the representations from crusher bodies/quarries seeking relaxation in the norms.

In 1986, the distance required for quarries/crushers from habitations, State Highways and National Highways was 2 km. Today, the distance is 300 metres for 'notified habitations', 50 metres for highways, and 10 metres for village roads. For granite quarries, the distance is 50 metres from 'notified habitations'. The distance is determined based on the fly-rock potential of granite and stone, says an official.

As the protest intensified in Koratagiri, the crushers association and the truckers association came together to demand an end to it.

"The protest was fanned by 'vested interests' affecting the movement of gravel to the Metro work in Bengaluru," said Shanmugappa, president, truck owners association. Locally, business and political interests are also intermeshed.

The protest was significant: it was the first such community protest in a district with stakes in quarrying as opposed to the submission of individual petitions by aggrieved farmers.

From global high table to voice of Global South: India's wide G20 plan

NEW DELHI: The Narendra Modi government plans to showcase the Indian model of development and the country's unique and significant achievements (such as leadership in fin-tech), and emphasise its position as a shaper of agendas with a seat at the global high table, but also a voice of the "Global South" in India's first G20 Presidency, people familiar with the matter said.

In 200-plus meetings across 56 cities, New Delhi will demonstrate the country's successes such as its public digital infrastructure, its generics industry's role as "the pharmacy of the world", and its robust financial inclusion model, the people added, listing in detail for the first time, the country's plans for its G20 Presidency which commences on December 1 and ends in September 2023.

It will also push its agenda on lifestyle for environment (LiFE), first mentioned by Prime Minister Narendra Modi at the climate conference in 2021, and launched by him and the UN chief this year, climate financing, energy transition and women-led development.

"We want the G20 presidency to be action and outcome oriented. Our focus will be these issues. We want to reach high level principals. The major decisions taken earlier will continue but we will try to marry them with new innovations. We want to position the Indian model for potential solution of issues and development," said one of the people cited above.

The government will also showcase the country's soft power; a dose of culture, a taste of cuisine, and excursions to places of historical interest.

Top objectives

India, the people added, sees an opportunity in the fact that its G20 presidency comes amid a global geopolitical and economic crisis. It also comes against the backdrop of the India's crucial role in driving consensus at the Bali Summit of the G20 where, according to a second person, 15 rounds of ministerial meetings failed before India stepped in. Paragraph 3 of the Bali declaration—on the Russian aggression in Ukraine—was an outcome of the intervention.

The G20 Declaration 2022, drafted by the Indian Sherpa, adopted in Bali last week was copied verbatim by the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) leaders on their stand on the Russia-Ukraine conflict.

Amitabh Kant, the G20 sherpa for India, said, "this is the first time India is going to set the agenda for the world. So far, we were reacting to the agenda being received from the developed world".

"Now, the leadership is getting transferred to a developing country and therefore, while we look at the world, it is important to bring in the India narrative. Some unique things have happened to India such as the digital transformation, which is very distinct from what the West has done.... We have also done a unique story on health as the pharmacy of the world," he added.

The G20 countries account for 85% of global GDP, 60% of the world's population and 75% of all trade. New Delhi plans to host the most inclusive meetings with over 800 special invitees from Bangladesh, Egypt, Nigeria, Oman, Singapore, Mauritius, Netherlands, Spain and UAE, international bodies, and business leaders.

New Delhi also faces key challenges. The climate crisis is accelerating. Covid-19 and the Ukraine Russia war have meant a setback to Sustainable Development Goals, and the pandemic has pushed 300 million people back into poverty. Many countries face a debt crisis, resulting in food and energy crises.

"But PM Modi is clear. This is an opportunity for India to drive the consensus," said Kant.

The Modi government, however, brings with it a massive scale

Main focus areas for G20 presidency

VOICE OF GLOBAL SOUTH

Showcasing areas of high credibility: Public digital infrastructure, pharmacy and a robust financial inclusion model

Areas of global influence: Lifestyle for environment (LiFE), climate finance, energy transition and women-led development

Talk of future: Institutional reforms for 21st century, handling debt crisis

India's G20 presidency to be action and outcome oriented, to position Indian model for potential solution of issues and development

PREPARATIONS

13 working groups formed under Sherpa Track to oversee content. Each group to prepare issue notes that will translate into outcome documents to form the basis of G20 negotiations

Besides meetings of foreign ministers and line ministers, 11 engagement groups, central bank governors will hold meetings

200 meetings to be held across 56 locations in India before the summit

OUTREACH PROGRAMMES

Activities like beach and coastal cleaning, showcasing green building, cultural exhibition, waste recycling, health camps, tech hackathon, promoting Rupay cards in diaspora

Two exhibitions in Delhi: India as mother of democracy and digital transformation

of operations and an enviable track record in the delivery of public goods, the people explained.

The country's economy will remain the fastest growing among major economies in 2022-23 and 2023-24 according to the IMF.

India is also a global fintech leader, and boasts the world's third-largest start-up ecosystem. "We are fast emerging as tech garage of the world," Kant added.

Background operations

Aware that not all G20 presidencies have been impactful, India has already set up its G20 secretariat in the well-equipped Sushma Swaraj Bhavan in south Delhi.

There are 13 working groups under the Sherpa Track and each group will prepare issue notes that translate into outcome documents. "Those outcome documents will form the basis of the negotiations that go for the next few months and will ultimately lead to the leaders' declaration," said the first official.

There will also be meetings of foreign ministers and line ministers. A total of 11 Engagement Groups, finance ministers, and the central bank governors will meet separately in about eight meetings.

The ministries have already been assigned their tasks. The issue of anti-corruption is being handled by the DoPT, and agriculture, culture, tourism, health, education, labour and employment and climate change by the respective ministries.

The agenda of development is being driven by the external affairs ministry, that for the digital economy by MEITY, disaster management by NDMA, trade and investment by the commerce ministry and energy transition by the power ministry. "All their inputs will come to the G20 secretariat and we will then circulate the issue papers," added the first official.

The Engagement Groups have been formed for subjects such as business, start-ups, women, science, and urban development. "We are moving from being a contributor of agenda to a shaper of agenda. These are areas where India wants to help build consensus," said the second person

The taste of India

The 200-plus meetings over the next one year will provide an opportunity for the participants and delegates to discover India to its fullest, the people said.

The G20 secretariat has planned outreach activities that include "beach and coastal cleaning, showcasing green building, cultural exhibition, waste recycling, health camps with a focus on Ayurveda and traditional medicine, technology hackathon, showcasing millets and food and promoting Rupay cards among the diaspora."

Two exhibitions are to be held in Delhi during the G20 Summit next year: "India as the mother of democracy" and "the country's rapid digital transformation". "There are 4 billion people in the world without a digital ID. We made 50 years of progress in 7 years in digital transactions. What we are trying to showcase is the Indian model for financial inclusion can be implemented globally," said the first official.

The government also aims to make the experience "spiritually elevating, culturally enriching and mentally rejuvenating".

The meetings will be held across India, in large cities, but also off the beaten track, such as Imphal, Kohima, Leh, Port Blair, Siliguri, Agartala, Gangtok, Shimla, Rishikesh, Aizawl and Agartala.

All these meetings will give the dignitaries and visitors a chance to taste local cuisine and experience Indian cultural programmes.

SC benches for accident, land, taxation, crime

Utkarsh Anand

NEW DELHI: A flurry of specialised benches is set to speed up the wheels of justice in the Supreme Court with the Chief Justice of India (CJI) Dhananjaya Y Chandrachud announcing on Wednesday four exclusive benches to decide cases arising out of distinct branches of law.

The CJI said that next week onwards, the Supreme Court will have specialised benches to deal with cases pertaining to criminal appeals, land acquisition, motor accidents, and tax matters.

"Don't worry. We are going to have four specialised benches from next week... for criminal appeals, land acquisition matters, motor accident claims tribunal cases and on direct and indirect tax," the CJI told a lawyer, who wanted his matter listed quickly.

While the names of other judges who will head these benches are yet to be known, justice Chandrachud said that justice Surya Kant is likely to lead the bench on land acquisition matters.

"This is a very salutary and laudable initiative by the honourable CJI. The felicitous step will go a long way in dispensation of speedier and prompt justice to the litigants as all these cases deserve expedited hearing and disposal. The Supreme Court could also consider including service matters involving transfer and reversion, dismissal and removal, in this list," said advocate Abhishek Gupta.

On Tuesday, justice Chandrachud mentioned the special bench to exclusively deal with tax cases as he heralded yet another reform in the top court days after taking over as the CJI. The judge, who took the helm on November 9, had a day ago told a group of lawyers who were present in his court hall to seek dates of hearing that the tax bench will sit on Wednesdays and Fridays to handle direct and indirect sales tax matters solely.

It was in 2015 that the Supreme Court, under then CJI HL Dattu, had a special tax bench, which scripted a success story by delivering around 200 judgments in tax laws in less than a year. The total number of tax judgments delivered in 2015 was the highest for a year since 2007, and this also facilitated wrapping up over 500 connected cases.

Four new benches to take up cases related to four distinct branches of law.

Last Friday, justice Chandrachud declared that matters of personal liberty shall be prioritised in the new regime, as he apprised the lawyers of a full court meeting on November 15 when a resolution was passed to hear 10 bail matters and 10 transfer pleas on each day of the week. He stressed on giving precedence to the cases where petitioners have been inside jails or fear imminent curtailment of liberty.

A circular in this regard was also put out on the court website on Thursday, stating: "10 transfer petitions (after notice) followed by 10 bail matters will be listed at the top of the board before the hon'ble courts on all five days."

The circular added that generally around seven fresh matters will also be listed on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. "Regular Hearing Matters will be listed on Wednesday and Thursday."

Last week, justice Chandrachud also informed lawyers of the steps taken by him to streamline the listing mechanism. He announced that all matters registered on Saturday, Monday and Tuesday will be automatically listed the following Monday, and matters registered on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday will be listed the following Friday.
