Communal violence in J&K town, curfew on

ARUN SHARMA
Jammu, May 16
COMMUNAL VIOLENCE BROKE out in Bhatnagar town of Doda district on Thursday morning as the killing of a man triggered protests in the area. While the victim of an alleged clash was targeted on suspicion of being involved in cattle trade, the Doda district administration ruled out cow vigilantism as the reason behind the murder.

Naeem Ahmad Shah (50), resident of Qilla Mohalla in Bhatnagar, was walking home from Basti village with two others, when he was shot by some people at Nalhti bridge around 2 am on Thursday. Quoting one of the men accompanying Shah, identified as Yaqub Hussain, sources said when the men reached near Nalhti bridge, they noticed some people hiding behind the bushes. These people allegedly started abusing them and accused them of being cattle smugglers. One of the men accompanying Shah reportedly switched on a torch to show that they were taking mules, not cows. But someone fired from behind the bushes, killing Shah on the spot. Hussain and the other man managed to flee to Qilla Mohalla. Later, the residents of Qilla Mohalla staged protests at Nalhti bridge. They refused to take Shah's body till the accused were arrested. The protests continued for nearly four hours.

Family facing GM brinjal storm: 'What's our crime'

SUKHRA SIWACH
Ratia (Fatehabad), May 16

"WHAT CRIME HAVE we committed," asks Miro Rani, the fear visible on her face. Rani is the wife of Ishar Saini, a brinjal farmer near Ratia town in Fatehabad.

Govt panel says Saini will have to destroy his crop

The Sainis, who have grown brinjal on the three kanals (less than half-acre) of land they own, are at the centre of a brewing storm over the use of GM brinjal or other genetically modified crops in Haryana. On Thursday, a panel of experts set by the state government recomended that their crop be uprooted immediately. Officials said the recommendation is based on a report by the National Bureau for Plant Genetic Resources (NBPGR), which found that samples from Saini's farm are not GM brinjal but come under genetically modified (GM) crop.

In 2010, the central government had imposed a moratorium, leaving Bt cotton as the only genetically modified crop permitted for cultivation in the country. "The committee has submitted its report. The crop should be buried deep beneath the earth or burnt, so that it doesn't affect neighbouring fields," says Prof KC Singh, Vice-Chancellor, Haryana Agricultural University (HAU).

We never felt any harmful impact. This year, too, we sold the crop for about ₹12,000. But after the advice of government officials, we have stopped selling it since the last 20 days," says Saini. "After my neighbour's crop got destroyed, we went to Dabwali to search for the vendor who cheated us but could not find him," says Saini.

According to Chaudhary, the activists also sent samples to the GEAC, demanding that it investigate the case and take legal action against the source of supply of the seeds. "In addition to finding the extent of cultivation and action against the seed/supply network of illegal Bt brinjal, we also demand the destruction of all Bt brinjal plots. However, simultaneously we demand that no penal action should be taken against farmers who have been duped into cultivating these illegal seeds. Rather, farmers must be fully compensated for destruction of their standing crop," the representation states. Based on this representation, officials say, the Union ministry of environment, forest and climate change asked the Haryana government to take necessary steps to ascertain the facts on ground.

In a letter sent to the Haryana chief secretary, Chaudhary wrote: "The formation of an experts committee to study the effects of GM crops is illegal... when an indefinite moratorium placed by the government of India on release of Bt brinjal is still in place and no GM brinjal has been approved for cultivation in India... you are duty bound to immediately identify the supply chain of Bt brinjal being cultivated in Haryana and plug it besides destroying the extant crop. It appears that by acting taking such a decision, you are facilitating the destruction of the evidence."

When contacted by The Indian Express, R K Chauhan, joint director, Haryana Environment Department, said: "In a meeting on Tuesday, Haryana chief secretary D S Dhest has also asked officers of the horticulture department to conduct a survey to locate Bt Brinjal crop, if any, in all 22 districts of the state." Subhash Poonia, a Haryana farmers' leader, says the farmer should not be harassed in the process. "They are innocent farmers. They don't know about ill effects of genetically modified crops," he says.
