Brands slog it on the fitness

Stuck in a cluttered marketplace, GOQii, Cure.Fit, and health and fitness brands, are looking at ways to

VINAY UMARJI
Ahmedabad, 2 September

From fad diets to wearable fitness trackers, health and fitness are on everyone's mind. And brands promising to help allay the universal and growing concerns over one's mind and body are crowding the alleyways, be it at local supermarkets or online marketplaces. While some have appointed celebrity endorsers to add more punch to their promises, others are combing through the data pouring into their apps to create a custom-fit or offering an aggregated service pack. But in the alphabet soup of trackers, apps and advisories, foods and other gadgets, how do brands differentiate their promise and more importantly, find the trust of their consumers?

A few brands such as GOQii, Cure.Fit or HealthifyMe are picking their way through the crowd. For instance, GOQii (wearable products) has Akshay Kumar as brand endorser to combat the fire-power of market leader Xiaomi. HealthifyMe has localised its content, customised the experience and is banking on AI-powered coaches to get an edge over the competition and Cure.fit is bundling products and services to tackle physical and mental fitness, nutrition and primary healthcare.

By tweaking the product and finding a famous face to endorse it, brands are ratcheting up the numbers. For instance, while Xiaomi has 41 per cent of the wearable products market with its range of Mi Bands (IDC figures for Q3 of 2018), GOQii at 19 per cent share in terms of shipments is at number two. But GOQii is clipping ahead at 47 per cent, lower than Xiaomi's 77 per cent, but still way ahead of

NHAI to offer highways as loan security

The funds are expected to be raised over 30 years and the interest rate will be reset every 10 years. The government wants longer tenure loans for infrastructure projects.

The NHAI borrowed ₹20,000 crore from the government's National Small Savings Fund (NSSF) last year. It is now looking to double the amount in 2019-20 (FY20).

The NSSF loan is part of the NHAI's overall borrowing plan of ₹75,000 crore for FY20. Besides fund raising, the government sanctioned ₹36,691 crore for internal and extra budgetary... generation.

Financial stress of the NHAI has become a concern, with the Minister's Office (PMO) recently in with its suggestions. The PMO the Ministry of Road Transport and Highways (parent ministry of the) to improve its operational performance.

The PMO also suggested that NHAI monetise its road asset base through toll-operate-transfer (TOT) and through an infrastructure investment trust (InvIT). It asked the NHAI to start new projects under the build-transfer (BOT) model where the government's capital commitment is
