Inflation, monetary policy and growth

Roshan Kishore

NEW DELHI: There is a divergence between wholesale and retail inflation.

Consumer Price Index (CPI), India's benchmark inflation measure, grew at 6.9% in the month of July. Headline inflation has been growing at more than 6%, the upper limit of RBI's tolerance level, since December 2019. March was the only exception. India's other inflation measure, Wholesale Price Index (WPI), has been contracting since April 2020 (See Chart 1).

To be sure, this is not the first instance of divergence between the two inflation measures. A 2014 Mint story by this author pointed out that there have been four such instances since 1982-83. The divergence between the CPI and WPI is not surprising as they differ in composition. Food items have a share of almost 30% in the CPI basket. This is just 21% for WPI. Therefore food price hikes generate stronger inflation for CPI than for WPI. CPI actually moves very closely with each other (See Chart 2).

Inflation is entirely explained by the weightage to food.

Difference in weightage of food items is not the only reason for divergence in CPI and WPI. A comparison of non-food components of CPI and WPI brings out this fact clearly. (Chart 3)

This too is understandable. WPI is focused on capturing producer costs while CPI is representative of the average consumer basket of Indian households. The CPI basket includes after the National Statistical Office's consumption expenditure surveys. CPI has components such as housing and recreation. WPI has crude petroleum and engineering goods.

Inflation expectations of households are still high. Inflation expectations of households have come down compared to what they were six years ago. But they continue to be significantly above RBI's target band of 3-6%. It also shows that trajectory of current and future inflation expectations for households has been almost identical in India. (See Chart 4)

What does one make of the fact that headline inflation in India has also increased 4.6% plus over the last four years? Does it mean that the Indian economy has been in a persistent inflation demand? ... But this does not mean there

POLICY MOVES REQUIRED

As growth, inflation and unemployment are all expected to remain high, the RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy.

These conditions require different policy interventions. Demand shock is not a long-term solution. It is a short-term fix. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy.

The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy.

The lockdown must have made matters worse on this front. It is the central challenge facing India. At a time when the economy is in a contraction phase, the RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy. The RBI may have to consider a more aggressive monetary policy.

SC sets September 30 deadline to complete Babri trial

Mumbai: The Supreme Court has set a deadline of September 30 for completing trial and pronouncing the verdict in the criminal case against BJP leaders L.K. Advani, Murali Manohar Joshi and Uma Bharti for the demolition of the Babri Masjid in 1992.

The apex court had in May asked the special judge, Sarvesh Kumar Yadav, to complete the trial and deliver its judgment by August 31. A three-judge bench headed by Justice Rethina Kumar is considered the deadline by one month after taking into account a report by Justice Yadav stating that the trial was at its end. Having read the report of Mr. Sarvesh Kumar Yadav, learned Special Judge, and considering that the proceedings are at the end, the court granted one month's time till September 30, 2020, to complete the trial.
