GLOBAL VOICE

Trade disputes that threaten American exports

R Muthu Kumar

United States is negotiating with several trade partners to end the national security tariffs on steel and aluminum. The bad news is that there are six countries on the outside of these negotiations looking in, all of which will soon win favorable rulings against the U.S. at the World Trade Organization (WTO). It's time to settle these cases too, Marc Busch has expressed his opinion in The Hill recently. The Biden administration has sought to ease tensions with Europe, Japan and the United Kingdom (UK). But China, India, Norway, Russia, Switzerland and Turkey are still waiting for relief. This is a big problem, because these countries have cases pending at the WTO, and rulings are due in the second quarter of 2022. The U.S. will lose them all. Worse, the way in which the U.S. will lose is going to create chaos throughout the global economy and imperil American exports for years to come. President Biden needs to burn the midnight lamp to avert this chaos by settling these cases. All the crisis started when in 2017, the Trump administration pulled the trigger on 25 percent tariffs on steel, and 10 percent tariffs on aluminum. This was done under Section 232, a provision in the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 that had never been used. The move caused outsized tensions, not because of the magnitude of the tariffs, but because President Trump justified them as being about national security, despite targeting countries like Canada, Norway and Switzerland. As a legal defence, U.S. tried third-party submissions in cases pitting Ukraine against Russia, and Qatar against Saudi Arabia, the Trump administration demanded that this exception was

"non-justiciable," meaning the WTO can't review it. Russia and Ukraine were shooting at each other, so the WTO let Russia off the hook. Saudi Arabia had pulled its diplomats from Qatar, which (unfortunately) also persuaded the WTO, but there was a catch. In the Russia case, the WTO said that the further removed a case is from armed conflict or public disorder, the tighter the connection needed between the trade measure(s) used and the country's national security. This tripped up Saudi Arabia, which had refused to give legal representation to Qataris protecting their intellectual property in a Saudi court. The WTO ruled that this measure didn't contribute to Saudi Arabia's "essential security interests." In February 2020, the WTO asked the U.S. nearly 50 questions about its use of the national security exception.

Many of these questions were also posed to third parties. Norway, for example, which has also filed against the U.S., chimed in as a third party in China's case with a biting critique of the U.S. argument about non-justiciability. The aluminum tariffs on Russia pose a real commercial challenge, but they can be put on hold until hostilities ease with Ukraine. Big picture, what would the six U.S. losses mean? After all, couldn't the U.S. just appeal the rulings, leaving them in the legal void it created by blocking reappointments to the WTO's Appellate Body? Yes, but this would be short-sighted. It would lead allies to shy away from working with the U.S. to build secure supply chains in critical technologies, fearing a repeat performance. And it would wreck U.S. investments in a rules-based global economy, not just in Geneva, but also in the Indo-Pacific and elsewhere.

That would be the greatest threat to America's national security interests. The United States has reached a deal with the European Union (EU) to resolve a three-year dispute over tariffs on steel and aluminum imported from the bloc in October, 2021. Failing to reach a deal with the Trump administration, the EU took the case to the WTO and imposed retaliatory tariffs on a range of American products. United States and Japan can step up their game as President Biden is expected to visit Tokyo in May for an official state visit. It will also be a stage for meeting with the leaders of the Quad, which also includes India and Australia. Perhaps by the time Biden arrives, the U.S. and Japan will have resolved their dispute over steel and aluminum tariffs, a trade irritant held over from the Trump administration.

Sri Lanka on Tuesday defended its proposed amendments to the draconian counter-terrorism law as the "most progressive step" towards securing and protecting the fundamental rights of its citizens. The foreign ministry in a statement said the proposed bill to amend the Prevention of Terrorism Act (PTA), which the government intends to introduce in parliament and upon it being passed into law, would be a salutary piece of legislation that would give persons tangible protection. After 43 years since it was enacted, "it would be the most progressive step that would give persons subject to the said law, tangible protection towards securing, advancing and protecting their fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution". The statement comes as Sri Lanka was due to meet the EU sub committee
