the audience. Since I had reached early, I had a chance to witness the exwitterment in the eyes of children and prents anticipating the arrival of Murry whois much lowed for her children's blocks. What I beheld seemed like as scene out of a Bollywood film. Here nerry reminded me of the moment in Farah Khan's Um Shaut(Um (2007) when Depils a Fadultone support of the car and onto the reid car pet. While I knew that any the of children's block of the little start of the start of the

"Ask me anything. You don't have to ask what your parents or teachers havetold you to ask," she assured them. They enquired about here writing process, characters in her books, and her sources of inspiration. Recalling the event, she now tells me, "I love children, so I have a heart-to-heart connection. Uthink that I am a natural affi. As agrandparent, you do not have the is love." Do her granddaughters, Krishna (12) and Anoushka (10) — the children of venture capitalist and fashion designer Akshata Murty and the United Kingdom's current Prime Minister Rishi Sunak — feel jealous because Minister Rishi Sunak — Feel jealous because they have to share their aliji with other children? She says, "They have grown up. Sometimes, they fight with each other to sit next to me but they have not seen sessions in India where lithreart with other children because they do not live here." Her most recent book for children, published by Puffin, is called How the Margo Gott Is Maget. It is part of as erise that also includes books such as How the Sea Became Safar How the Earth Got Is Bearwayna H Brow

"Children are curious by nature, so I thought of writing these books, which growide creative built convincing explanations and also teach values like sharing is caring." Given her academic background in science and her voluminous literary output in Kannada and English—for adults as well as children—she believes that "being analytical and being artisic muss go hand in hand as you need boh." Apart from being grateful to the illustrators who enhance the visual appeal of her books and "give readers a break from pages and pages of text", she thinks that her success as a storyreller comes from having spen to ver two decades with her paternal and maternal grandmotters. "They took care of me, told beautiful stories, and always walked their tak." How does she feel when stories about her personallife make it to different media platforms? "There is nothing that you can do toclarify or coroted hings mediation, soil is best toignore and focus on your work." As I put away my coffee mug, she fills me in on upcoming profest. "I am writing a book about file lessons that learnt from simple people like cook, a bus conductor, and others. This is for adults, I am also planning to write one for children."
