iPhone output likely to fall 30% as Covid curbs hit major China plant

PLAN B. Foxconn working to boost output at another facility to make up for the shortfall

Reuters
Shanghai

Production of Apple Inc's iPhones could slump by as much as 30 per cent at one of the world's biggest factories next month due to tightening Covid curbs in China, said a person on Monday.

Manufacturer Foxconn, formally Hon Hai Precision Industry Co Ltd, is working to boost production at another factory in Shenzhen city to make up for the shortfall, said the person, declining to be identified as the information was private.

Its main Zhengzhou plant in central China, which employs about 200,000 people, has been rocked by disconcerting measures to curb the spread of Covid, with several workers fleeing the site over the weekend.

The possible impact on production comes amid a traditionally busy time for electronics makers ahead of the year-end holiday season, which is also a prime time for vendors such as Apple.

BREAD AND BUTTER. Foxconn is Apple's biggest iPhone-maker, producing 70% of iPhone shipments globally

Foxconn, on Sunday, said it was bringing the situation under control and would coordinate back-up production with other plants to reduce any potential impact. Its share price closed down 1.4 per cent on Monday versus a 1.3 per cent rise in the broader market.

Apple did not respond to a request for comment. Foxconn is Apple's biggest iPhone-maker, producing 70 per cent of iPhone shipments globally, which in turn makes up 45 per cent of the Taiwanese firm's revenue, analysts at Taipei-based Pibon Research said this month.

It also builds the device in India, but its Zhengzhou factory assembles the majority of its global output. A second person familiar with the situation said many workers remained at the Zhengzhou plant and that production was continuing.

ZERO-COVID POLICIES Under China's ultra-strict zero-Covid policies, localities must act swiftly to quell outbreaks, with measures including full-scale lockdowns.

Factories in affected areas are often allowed to stay open on condition they operate under a closed loop system where staff live and work on-site. Businesses have said such arrangements pose numerous difficulties.

On October 19, Foxconn banned dining at canteens at the Zhengzhou plant and required workers to eat meals in dormitories. It said production was normal.

The measures led to people who said they worked at the site venting frustration about their treatment and provisions via social media.

Visitors stuck as Shanghai Disney shuts down

Reuters
Beijing

Shanghai's Disney Resort abruptly suspended operations on Monday to comply with Covid prevention measures, with all visitors at the time of the announcement directed to stay in the park until they return a negative test for the virus.

The resort said at 11:39 am local time (03:39 GMT) it would immediately shut the main theme park and surrounding areas including its shopping street until further notice to comply with virus curbs.

The Shanghai government

PLAYING SPOILSPORT. Visitors were directed to stay in the park until they return with a negative test for Covid said on its official WeChat account the park was barring people from entering or exiting and that all visitors inside the site would need to await the results of their tests before they could leave.

Anyone who had visited the park since October 27 would need to test for Covid three times in three days, it said.

Neither the Shanghai government nor the Disney resort gave further details. The resort had on Saturday said that it had started operating with a reduced workforce to comply with Covid measures.

The theme park continued to operate rides for visitors stuck in the park during the closure on Monday, social media users reported.

Shanghai reported 10 locally transmitted cases for October 30, all of which it said were people without symptoms. The closure marks the latest disruption for the Shanghai Disney Resort, which was shut for over three months during Shanghai's lockdown earlier this year.
