'You can't have an outlier position on tariffs'

Bharti Enterprises Founder and Chairman SUNIL MITTAL speaks to Nivedita Mookerji and Subhayan Chakraborty in a free-wheeling interview. Excerpts:

"WHEN JIO CAME IN, WE HAD 30 PER CENT REVENUE MARKET SHARE. WE ARE NOW TOUCHING CLOSER TO 40 PER CENT"

GB (per month) with a higher ARPU. India averages 23 GB with a lower ARPU. So you can imagine the burden of investments on the network. We have to create higher capacities for the higher consumption, on which we get no extraction. Return on investment is low in India.

Do you agree there has been predatory pricing in the industry in the recent past, given how each player has complained against the other?

This industry is waiting for an increase in tariffs to be financially healthy. Who is holding it back is for you to determine. It's not us.

When do you think Airtel can cross Reliance Jio in terms of subscribers and be a leader?

We are not in the numbers game. People see Airtel as a leader, without a doubt. We may not be ahead of our competitors in numbers, that's okay.

Is that because going forward the numbers will matter less with 5G bringing online other revenue streams?

Numbers already matter less. If you look at VLR or active subscribers, we already have 99 per cent active subscribers, as compared to 80 per cent for our competitors. In many circles, we have remained leaders. We have not given up. What matters is what kind of customers you have. What counts is whether they are better quality customers, in the mid to high segment, or people who care for brands and are willing to pay a little bit extra. Otherwise, it's just a numbers game which even our teams do not focus on. We aim for a solid revenue market share.

When Jio came in, we had 30 per cent revenue market share in the country. We are now touching closer to 40 per cent. That is more important for us.

In the current geopolitical scenario, do you think it's a concern that Chinese vendors are being left out in the telecom sector?

They were a very big part of the supply chain. It's very clear that a position has been taken where trusted sources, trusted products, trusted shoring have become a norm. As far as India is concerned, we had a smaller portion of our network with Chinese vendors. We stopped at that. We have 100 per cent non-Chinese 5G and Reliance has also done 100 per cent non-Chinese. Vodafone has not started but they too have no choice because now you cannot buy anything that's not certified. So far there's nothing on the statute to block Chinese, but we have not seen them getting the certificate of trusted networks.

Is there any clarity from the government on whether they would get such a certificate?

We don't know, but my view is that the train has left the station. The orders have been placed—Ericsson, Nokia and a bit of Samsung—and we can't roll back even if they (Chinese) are allowed tomorrow.

Quality of services—we are still not able to continue a call for five minutes... Why?

It's not true. I can take you to my data room... See the millions of calls that are going on and look at the call drops... it's the lowest ever.

But aren't people still relying on WhatsApp calls?

That's because people have got used to it. We don't mind it. Unlike many other parts of the world where they block calls on WhatsApp, we have not. Anyway, it's not WhatsApp providing the network, it's the telecom service providers providing the network... Call drops is an old mindset... Some poor network areas are a possibility but compare it to the rest of the world. Go to London and see, go to New York and see, go to Paris and see. Ours is significantly better.

Has there been any protest against hike in charges for OTT platforms sending

SMS to their consumers?

It's still very low. I think the OTT world should learn to share the burden of our telecom rollout. Telcos are spending hundreds of dollars globally on building networks. The total cost is going to be upwards of $2 trillion in rolling out the 5G networks. Who enjoys it? I put up the network, and they have a call. There should be some money coming from them. Why not?

What's your take on the telecom regulatory scene in India now?

I would say there's a pleasant change in the regulatory environment in India in the last few years, whether it's the ministerial leadership level or it's at the department level or regulator's. There's an even-handed approach to the industry. For this, they should be complimented and companies like us feel very positively relieved to have a very conducive telecom environment. An area where we are still pushing and pressing is on the levies. There's been only one area where there's been progress—spectrum usage charge where we've always been saying you can rent or sell but you can't sell and rent. This is exactly what was happening prior to the change—you sold spectrum and then you also took rent. Rent was supposed to be when there was no auction. This was an anomaly that cost the industry heavily. That's gone now. The second part now is the USO fund which is at 5 per cent. This is meant for universal service obligation—we are doing that, every village is covered. We have done the job that is required under USO. There's a large amount of money sitting on the USO Fund—₹65,000 crore. Why burden the industry more? The need of the country is to connect more, we will do it ourselves... Last is the licence fee at 3 per cent. It's a relic of the past. Abolition of 80 per cent of bank guarantees was very helpful. My view would be why keep the 20 per cent! Why have guarantees at all.

Beyond telecom, how is it being head of the B20 African Council in the run up to G20 Summit?

The economic integration of Africa is one of the areas where the Prime Minister wants to leave his legacy. There are two councils at B20, on African integration, and ESG, while the others are task forces. I was happy to take this charge given that it is my 13th year of foraging into African a big way. We have produced a good document, which is ready to be presented now. Our final meeting is coming up in August, when we will make our recommendation to the G20. I'm hoping the G20 will adopt it.

What is the significance and the goal of the B20 Council on African Economic Integration?

The agenda is the integration of Africa. Africa is a huge continent, with $3.2 trillion and 1.3 billion people, and 56 countries. But between themselves, they trade very little. I was heavily involved in the creation of the trade facilitation agreement at the World Trade Organization which happened a few years back as the Paris-based chairman of the International Chamber of Commerce. It was heavily geared towards Africa so that cross-border trade becomes easy and better technologies are introduced. A lot of money was also given to Africa to upgrade their tech, and harmonise their tariff codes. But it still did not happen.

We now have the African Free Trade Continental Agreement, which can create an European Union type of economic bloc. It must trade within itself as much as it can... The US has also committed $55 billion worth of support to Africa in the next three years. This capital will support Africa's growth.

You have one of the largest telecom businesses in Africa. What are the lessons that India and the world can take from Airtel Africa?

I would say digital connectivity. We are now talking about leading 4G connectivity across Africa. 5G has now begun launching. This is now giving the momentum to Africa given the lack of physical connectivity. This is giving people the opportunity to trade, join e-commerce, and have their goods sold. Being on the internet has other benefits such as education, health, government bulletins, etc. We are also showcasing how India's direct benefit transfer schemes are helping the masses.

What is the level of competition in the telecom space in Africa, and how does it compare with India?

Africa is usually a two player market somewhere in some cases, it is two and a half. India is slowly coming to that. But India of course is much much bigger than those African countries. We have maintained that a three-operator scenario is the ideal one. Even China has three. But certainly 10 to 12 operators, which was the case in India some years ago, was the wrong model.

Will it be easier to roll out 5G in Africa given that the birth pangs are known?

Africa is 100 per cent 4G. But we haven't been able to pull out the older layers since Africa has a lot of handsets supporting old tech. 2G and 3G are also running. Nigeria and a few other countries have started 5G roll-out.
