CM SAYS 40 KUKI MILITANTS KILLED Manipur sees fresh bout of violence

SUKRITA BARUAH
& JIMMY LEIVON
Kakching (Manipur), May 28

A DAY AHEAD of Union home minister Amit Shah's first scheduled visit to Manipur since clashes erupted on May 3, the state witnessed a fresh round of violence on Sunday.

Chief minister Biren Singh said around 40 Kuki militants — who he said were targeting civilians — have been killed so far by security forces while one civilian was killed by the insurgents in a village in Imphal West district late on Saturday. He did not specify the period during which the militants were killed.

After the large-scale violence that engulfed the state for three days since May 3 subsided, sporadic incidents of shooting and arson had continued to take place over the past three weeks, particularly in foothill areas where the Meitei-dominated valley meets Kuki-Zomi-dominated hills.

On the intervening night of May 27 and May 28, violence broke out in multiple such areas, including Sekmai, Phayeng, Torbung, Yaingangpokpi, Serou Lamkhai and Sugnu, and continued into the day.

Following the fresh incidents of arson and clashes, authorities lifted curfew relaxations for Imphal West and Imphal East districts.

Branding the Kuki militants as "terrorists", Singh told reporters, "We have launched operations against the terrorists who have been attacking civilians using sophisticated weapons like M16, AK 47 and snipers. So far, we have received reports that around 40 of them have been killed. Several others have also been captured..."

He said one civilian was killed Saturday night when the "terrorists" launched an attack at Phayeng in Imphal West district and that several others have been injured across the state.

"The fight is between the state and central forces against the terrorists who are trying to break Manipur. We will take strong action. It's not a fight between communities," he said.

Through the day on Sunday, Sugnu — a mixed population town in the area bordering Kakching district in the valley and Chandel district in the hills — and the areas around it saw exchange of fire and arson.

The road leading to the town had fast-moving two-way traffic. Leaving the town were vehicles — from private cars to buses — ferrying mostly women, children and the elderly out of Sugnu.

And flowing towards the town in assorted vehicles, were hundreds of men from other villages and towns in the valley, many of them armed with guns, catapults, and large knives, rushing to "defend" the area.

"We heard that shooting began here late at night. We don't trust the Army and security personnel. These incidents keep going on and they can't seem to do anything. We want to defend ourselves," said Hemjit Laishram, who had come from Pangantabi village.

Nimai Wahengbam, a resident of Sugnu who was escorting his sister and her children out of the town, said, "The firing started around 2 am in the presence of security personnel.

The reinforcements from other villages arrived around 5 am, and burned down a bridge to Kakching to prevent movement towards it."

Till 2 pm, when The Indian Express was present at the site, heavy firing continued to take place in the area between security personnel and alleged militants even as residents continued to flee the area. Signs of "retaliatory" action were also evident, with the Kuki village Lanching burnt to the ground.

The situation remained charged with tension throughout the district, with women in large numbers assembled on the road leading to Sugnu with sticks in hand, stopping and checking vehicles.

"We want to take control because we are not happy with the Army. We want them to go back," said R K Lakshmi Devi, who stood on the road with dozens of other women from the village at Wangoo Lamkhai. The men of the village had left for Sugnu.

The chief minister appealed to the women to not block the roads. "I appeal to the women folk... blocking roads to refrain from doing so. How can the security forces protect the lives and properties of the public if their movements are disrupted?" he said.

Digital India Bill: What to expect?

SOUAMYARENDRA BARIK
New Delhi, May 28

INDIA'S TECH REGULATIONS are at an inflection point as the country plans to overhaul rules governing the internet economy. A data protection Bill is drafting its finalisation and a draft law is being reworked.

But perhaps the most important law currently in the pipeline is the Digital India Bill, which will be successor to the decades old Information Technology Act, 2000.

Rajeev Chandrasekhar, minister of state for electronics and IT, who is a key figure behind the formulation of the IT Act's successor, has said the Digital India Bill will "harmonise" all the other tech laws that are subsequently being worked upon.

A first draft of the Digital India Bill is expected in the first week of June, and given the impact the legislation could have on stakeholders — internet businesses, users and the government — Chandrasekhar has carried out two rounds of pre-draft public consultations.

What is the new law for the internet?

Currently, the Information Technology Act, 2000 is the core framework that regulates entities on the internet. However, the law needs an update. Given its limitations, the government has also on occasion found it difficult to promulgate rules since the Act is limited in its scope.

Chandrasekhar said the core objectives of the Digital India Bill are to ensure an open and safe internet to ensure users' rights and reduce risks for them online; and accelerate the growth of technology innovation. But, what do we know about the Bill, and what are key areas it is likely to focus?

Revisiting safe harbour

Safe harbour — as prescribed under Section 79 of the IT Act, 2000 — is legal immunity that online intermediaries like social media platforms enjoy against content posted by users on their platforms. It is perhaps the most important regulatory freedom afforded to online platforms that has allowed platforms like Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, YouTube and WhatsApp to flourish in India.

However, Chandrasekhar has argued if safe harbour should exist at all.
