WHAT'S HOT: GADGETS.

Snappy start

The new iPhone 12 sports a 6.7-inch high-definition 144Hz AMOLED display. The smartphone is equipped with a 50MP + 50MP + 64MP triple rear camera system to capture your memories perfectly. The device features the all-new Android 14 based on Funtouch OS, making it the first non-Pixel smartphone to offer Android 14 out-of-the-box. Optimised temperature control algorithms make sure the smartphone is primed for gaming and that you never run into heating issues. There's also an inbuilt anti-fatigue brightness adjustment strategy which makes sure that the smartphone is easy on the eyes even with prolonged use. The flagship device is priced at ₹52,999 for 12 GB + 256 GB, and ₹57,999 for the 16 GB + 256 GB variant.

Work and play

The ASUS Chromebook Plus CX3402 is equipped with a gorgeous 14-inch Full HD display, with thin bezels to maximise the workspace. With a 1080p webcam that features temporal noise reduction and built-in video call controls that automatically enhance clarity and lighting, cancel noise and blur backgrounds, users always look and sound their best. This high-resolution camera can be quickly hidden behind a retractable privacy cover. Engineered with 12th gen Intel Core processors, these laptops deliver seamless productivity. With 128 GB storage, there's ample space for business files, school and entertainment content. The company also promises a 10-hour battery life—more than enough to power through a full day of work and play on this laptop, which is priced at ₹39,990 onwards.

Budget bite

Infinix Smart BHD is a 6.6-inch powerhouse with a touch of sophistication. With an HD+ Sunlight Redefinition display and four appealing colour variants, it ensures optimal visibility. Powered by the HiSCOR 1566 processor and a speedy 9Hz refresh rate, this smartphone promises to be an impressive upgrade. With up to 6 GB RAM and 64 GB internal storage, multitasking can get pretty seamless. The camera stunning photos with the 13MP dual AI camera and Quad LED ring flash. The enhanced BHD selfie camera ensures crisp self-portraits, even in low-light conditions. Running on Android 13 Go with XOS 13, the smartphone is powered by a 5,000mAh battery. It also throws in secure face-unlocking and a side-mounted fingerprint sensor, at a price of ₹7,999.

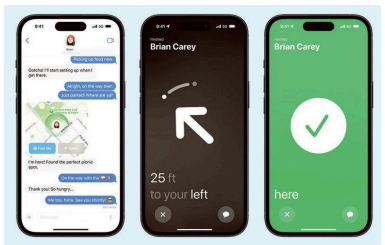

The baseline just got better!

APPLE IPHONE 15. A host of flagship features find their home in the most affordable iPhone launched this year

Mahananda Bohidar
This year, just like last year, I only begrudgingly switched from the Apple iPhone 15 Pro Max flagship model to the iPhone 15 baseline model. I love having the bigger screen — small screens make me squint. Who wouldn't love to use a device packed with all the flagship features? But I swapped the smartphone, anyway, because that's what the job demands. And, I have to say, after using it for a month, I'm not really mad that I switched!
The Apple iPhone 15 looks like a candy — sweet, pink, yummy tech canny. The glass on the rear panel itself has been infused with the colour. Our other shade options include black, blue, green and yellow. Apple's proprietary Ceramic Shield protects the rear panel, which has a powdery matt finish. The iPhone 15 sports a 6.1-inch Super Retina XDR OLED display with a pixel density of 460ppi. The peak brightness of the device has also been amped up to 2,000 nits compared to last year's 1,200 nits in the iPhone 14. However, the refresh rate is still at 60Hz, whereas most smartphones in this price range offer 90Hz, if not higher.

I logged in to DailyMotion to catch up on some BTS nostalgia — binge-watching old videos of Bangtan Boys' American Hustle Life. The visuals were crisp and I didn't even need to plug in my AirPods. The sound on the device is clear and rich, with videos as well as music that I streamed.
I was happy to see the Dynamic Island on the iPhone 15, as I loved it on the iPhone 14 Pro Max last year. For me, this was one of the small but meaningful additions that deserved to be brought to the entire line-up which Apple has delivered this year. I continue to use it to glance at my Spotify track at any given moment, log in to the device each time and use maps as we try to find our way to a new Korean restaurant in town.
CAMERA
I pop out the camera one fine Sunday as we're driving around and record some videos in motion, which turn out to be super crisp and smooth. The iPhone 15 has an upgraded 48 MP sensor as its primary, along with a 12 MP sensor, as the ultrawide lens. The stills captured on the move were also surprisingly sharp. The's minimal post-processing as the image saves in the device, resulting in vivid but realistic colours, tones and saturation. This was true for most of the photographs I took, especially under direct sunlight. However, some

With Precision Finding, iPhone 15 users can share location and find each other turned in less-than-optimal lighting taken out to be a bit grainer.

While I had the option of saving photographs in either JPEG or HEIF format, only the iPhone 15 Pro and Pro Max offered the choice of saving them as ProRAW images. The only downside was, sometimes, after shooting a video and taking some photos, I felt the area on the rear panel adjacent to the volume buttons warm up quite noticeably.

TECH SPECS
The new A16 Bionic processor plays a huge hand in how quick and snappy the iPhone 15 feels. The unit I reviewed had 512 GB storage, although you have the option of going for 128 GB or 256 GB, which are also more affordable. There's the much-awaited USB-C port, which honestly makes my life as a tech reviewer so much easier, simplifying how many cords I need to be juggling around. However, the transfer speeds through the USB 2.0 are not as fast as the ones on the Pro models.
According to the company, the smartphone is certified with the IP68 rating for protection against dust and water. This keeps it safe from being submerged in about 18 metres of water, for up to 30 minutes.
The battery life on the iPhone 15 is sufficient for a full day of functional usage. I had Spotify on for a couple of hours a day, checked emails frequently, and scrolled endless reels on my commute back home, before hitting the bed. Not to mention taking photos and the occasional 10-15 second video, while I was out and about. With all of this, I didn't always have to plug in the device before I hit the bed. Apple says that the iPhone 15 can charge up to 50 per cent in 30 minutes using a 20W adapter. In my experience, this claim was fairly accurate.

VERDICT
As a baseline model, the iPhone 15 is perhaps the most feature-packed option I've seen in recent times. I love the upgraded camera, the trickle-down of the Dynamic Island from last year's flagship models, the ease of a USB-C port and a capable new processor. If you've always wanted an iPhone but aren't sure you want the flagship variant, the iPhone 15 makes for a great starter pack to sample the best of what Apple has to offer.

Cons: No telephoto camera, low refresh rate, no always-on display

Privacy first, so you can wander around in peace!

TECH TRAILS. Incoming upgrades to Google Maps include saving timelines on-device, giving users control over their data

Team Technophile

With more online connectivity and presence, than ever in the history of mankind, no wonder we all have doubts about our privacy being protected by companies. With advancements in generative AI, where our faces, voices and digital trails can be replicated, it's high time companies focus on safeguarding the consumer's right to privacy as well. In the light of this reality, Google has just announced some measures, soon to hit our device, which offer a safer user experience on Google Maps.
The company has released information regarding the Timeline feature in Google Maps that helps users remember the places they visited. This feature is right now controlled by the 'location history' setting in the app.
Google now says that if one chooses to turn 'location history' on (it's off by default), soon their 'timeline' will be saved right on their device — giving users even more control over their data. Users will continue to have the choice of retaining or deleting any or all of this information at any time or disabling the setting entirely.
To begin with, when someone turns 'location history' on, the auto-delete control will be set to three months by default. Any location data older than that will be automatically deleted.
Second, you can choose to delete any activity related to specific places. Say, you're in a new city for an event and you get directions to a nearby beauty salon. Soon, you'll be able to see all your recent activity on Maps related to the salon, and easily delete your searches, directions, visits and shares, with just a few taps.
Thirdly, users will be able to access key location controls right from the blue dot, which pinpoints their current location on Google Maps. Just tap it and you'll see whether your 'location history' or 'timeline' settings are turned on and whether you've given Maps access to your device's location.

Marlo McGriff, Director of Product, Google Maps, reiterated while sharing these updates: "Your location information is personal. Google Maps never sells your data to anyone, including advertisers. So you can spend less time worrying about your data and more time exploring new places..."
These changes will be gradually rolled out through the next year on Android and iOS, and you'll receive a notification when this update comes to your account.

• HOT & 'APP'ENING

The best apps hand-picked for your pleasure, this week!

Mahananda Bohidar

This edition, I present to you two games that are completely opposites of each other, both in terms of narration and gameplay, except for being fun and engaging. And, an app that helps you curb your addiction to games and smartphone usage in general!

Bug Heroes: Tower Defense

Fun and chaotic is how I'd describe this action game.
There are a whole lot of controllable bugs who need to attack and defend the towers. As simple as that! There's an incessant narrative as the machine-gun battle wages on, which can get a bit annoying. However, the gameplay overall is quite fun. You move up levels quickly and upgrade ammo fast as well. You get to help the Bug Heroes defend their food stash from hordes of enemies. You get to master ten different Bug Heroes, each with their play style, abilities, and weapons. Scavenge for food and junk, build turrets, level up your heroes and towers, equip upgrades and defend against the enemy. You also have the option of taking direct control of your heroes from a third-person camera or playing like a traditional tower defence game with a classic over-head camera.

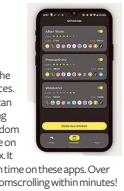

How to Get Espers

A rather unusual name for an unusual game! Fashioned to look like a graphic novel, the narrative of the gameplay focuses on Espers, who seem to have supernatural powers. The game has a lot of narration which is pictured almost like a series of early-2000s online chatrooms or even text messages. After setting the context in each scene, there are multiple choices offered to the player to take the narrative forward. As someone who didn't anticipate a lot of text in a game, progressing through the dialogues can get a bit exhausting. This game might be worth exploring if you're someone who doesn't like action-based, fast-paced, do-a-lot-of-games-and-just-want-an-experience that treats the line between casual gaming and a graphic novel you might have picked up.

Unplug: Control Your Time

Welcome to the Catch-22 reality of our lives where I need to recommend a smartphone app to help you (and me) stay off the smartphone for longer. Unplug promises to drastically cut down the mindless minutes and hollow hours that we end up wasting staring at our devices. Once logged in, I can set intentions for why I want to restrict my screen time. I can then choose a distraction barrier from a long list of options. It can be something scroll-based, shake-based, a tap pattern, walking around, QR code or just a random setting. Once activated, it will quickly restrict me from spending too much time on apps that suck all the time I have! These include Instagram, YouTube and Netflix. It also, by default, blocked Reddit and LinkedIn although I do not spend too much time on these apps. Over two to three days of usage, the app was super effective in getting me out of doomscrolling within minutes!
