Strawberry Fields Forever

A crop of elite Indian farmers are inviting guests on day trips to their organic farms — paid or free — to sit with them to pick fresh exotic vegetables and fruits like vine sorrel and succulent pomelos. Varun Khosla & Sreerasha D. Basu report

Documentary filmmaker Varun Khosla was exploring ways to increase his 'green quotient' when he stumbled upon the website of an organic farm 100 km outside Pune.

A visit to the Two Brothers Farm — run by Satyraj and Ajinkya Hange, who left their corporate jobs and went back to agriculture, created an organic charm — was a revelation, says Arora.

"I learnt that in big cities, our air, water and food are completely contaminated. What we're eating, is poison," says Arora. His visit made him complete organic food convert.

Arora is among the 600 odd people who've reached out to the Hange brothers to come to the farm either for a visit for day or two. The brothers allow it, with a caveat: guests must help out at the farm for a few hours a day. The food is on the house, and there is a small donation of about Rs 100. The itinerary includes a visit to the cow sheds, mulching, mud cropping and food forests.

Like the Hange brothers' farm, several like Tjara Organic Farm in Rajasthan, The Prodigal Farms in Noida, The Farm in Chennai, Krishna Creslin in Delhi and SRC Farms outside Kolkata, offer people visits.

People across age categories have an opportunity via either free or paid visits to these farms to come and learn about the healthier way of living — and better appreciate the farm and organic produce.

In the last two years alone, Satyraj says 800 people have come to visit them. The response is so overwhelming that he has to consider making this a separate revenue stream. They hope to commercialise this and the segment can give them a revenue of up to Rs 1 lakh a year. Similarly, Tjara gets about 200 visitors a year.

is considering making this a separate revenue stream. They hope to commercialise this and the segment can give them a revenue of up to Rs 1 lakh a year. Similarly, Tjara gets about 200 visitors a year. Farm schoolings for little children for monthly pop-up events, workshops on learning to grow vegetables, art/culture workshops at The Prodigal Farms in Noida offers 100. Founded by former consultant Puneet Tyagi and LSV Grand Neha Bhatia, the two have an open farm policy since 2017 and see as many as 100 visitors a week. The farm in Chennai has a free 20-minute walk for its customers. Winners are a peak season for visitors and revenues can go up to a Rs 3 lakh a month just from nag-tourism, says Varun. School children, who learn about various aspects of farming, are charged Rs 200 per head, including lunch, while visitors for the pop-ups pay about Rs 1,450 for seven-course meals that feature purple sweet potatoes and aegh, a vegetable hummingbird.

The Prodigal Farms has de-ups with over 20 schools and universities including Amberkar and Ashoka. The farm reaches a lot fashion students come to draw inspiration from nature, design students to learn about sustainable architecture, culinary students to cook responsibly.

New Year holidays are used by the coronavirus outbreak in Wuhan which has now reached 100 countries. "We have succeeded in the test production and are applying for certification. We anticipate being able to produce 20 million masks by the end of February," according to the Foxconn statement.

The spread of the disease has already prompted China's foreign ministry to appeal to the international community for donations in medical supplies — including surgical face masks, protective

The interest isn't surprising. India has the largest number of organic producers in the world, according to the World of Organic Agriculture Report 2018. It has 8.35 lakh certified organic producers. Even the farmers who don't change are getting into the growing awareness through the visits. It makes commercial sense, especially as they get to convert many more people to a healthier way of life, and often, in the process, making customers out of them. They also sell their produce in local farmers' markets.

The Tjara Organic Farm farm charges Rs 200 per person for a visit and provides a simple meal cooked from their produce. The farm also has a guest wing in Delhi's Andaz Hotel if their guests want to come over. Similarly, the Hyatt Regency in Delhi the company wants its diners to feel a local contact and often organises farm tours for its patrons to a private farm in Chaturpur which grows 100 vegetables and fruits like oyster mushrooms, khud, kohlrabi, Swiss chard, curly kale, blue tomatoes, purple cauliflower, purple cauliflower and watercress.

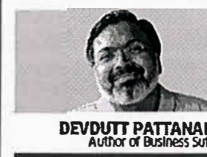

A third hotel, TTC Grand Bharu outside Delhi, has a private farm in its hotel while offering a similar experience to guests at Rs 5,000 plus taxes. SRC Farms, Eastern India's largest automated dairy, located about 66 km from Kolkata, is home to about 500 Holstein Friesian cows. Harsh Bhanu, its director, says that while he is flooded with queries from people wanting to visit, going forward he intends to have children only over the age of seven because he wants people who are genuinely interested in the experience.

So far over 20 groups and many individuals have visited and Bhanu says he is also getting queries from schools in Kolkata. He doesn't charge any money. "There's a lot to learn here about nutrition and hygiene," he says. Other than the merits of healthy eating, he also wants to educate people about rural life, he says.

At Tjara, co-founder Sneh Yadav says the farm gets all sorts of guests. Students from schools, college, chefs, young people who want to show their children how clean food grows and show much hard work goes into growing their food as a crop.

The Culture of Report Cards

We talk about equality, but we end up creating a hierarchy based on contribution, on possession, on property

Every child around the world is brought up in a culture of report cards. It is an unspoken rule that every year, based on the appraisal, they will be measured for their ability by their teachers and their parents: is he good? Is he better? Is he the best? Is he the worst? Is he at the top of the class? Is he at the bottom of the class? His intelligence quotient is being measured. His emotional quotient is being measured. His athletic ability is being measured. His skills are being measured. His attitude is being measured.

Excess on these measurements, his life is decided for him. He gets access to opportunities based on the report card. When he takes up a job, he gets a salary — every quarter every year — based on the appraisal. It defines his growth, his recognition. His reward. This, he is surrounded by people who are all trying to get the great prize. This makes them highly competitive, creating a system where there is no collaboration, because there can be only one winner, not all.

We talk of a culture of collaboration, but it cannot exist in a culture that is based on competition, nurtured by the report card. You have the celebrity list of the richest and the most powerful people in the world. You are on top of that list. Why would you want to be in the following year, in the bottom, or at a lower level of the list? Also, in order to stay at the top of the list, you have to keep generating and clinging on to more wealth and power. In other words, such popular lists of rich and powerful people create a culture which does not allow for generosity and delegation. You always want to remain on top of the game. The

Foxconn to Make Face Masks Alongside iPhones in China

Target: Foxconn will start manufacturing surgical face masks alongside Apple products at its Shenzhen factory, the world's biggest contract electronics maker announced Thursday in response to the deadly novel coronavirus outbreak. "Face masks are now the standard equipment in our fight against the epidemic," said Foxconn's 200-word statement on its official WeChat social media site. "Every second counts in this battle, the sooner we can ensure a supply of these goods, the sooner we can stop the epidemic."

The spread of the disease has already prompted China's foreign ministry to appeal to the international community for donations in medical supplies — including surgical face masks, protective clothing and safety goggles. The number of confirmed infections in Mainland China has now surpassed 60,000 cases and resulted in more than 630 deaths. The virus is also set to have an impact on international supply chains and manufacturing in China's supply chain in the global economy. Foxconn now projects a sales increase of one to three percent this year, down from a January forecast of three to five percent, chairman Young Liu told Bloomberg News.
