Lenovo sets sight on PLI to build servers

Company to participate in the ₹17,000-crore PLI scheme for IT hardware

NEW DELHI

Matthew Zielinski, president of international markets, Lenovo.

Lenovo is planning to ramp up local manufacturing in India, which it considers its top-priority market globally. The Chinese company, which makes laptops, tablets, servers and smartphones—under the Motorola brand—is evaluating manufacturing of servers in India as it looks to take advantage of the production-linked incentive (PLI) scheme for IT hardware amid regulatory clampdown in the US.

India is top priority of our international markets for several reasons. The obvious growth enabled by connectivity and being able to further propagate our devices, but we also have an enormously talented workforce in India, and continue to be on a doubling trajectory of jobs here,” said Matthew Zielinski, president of international markets at Lenovo. It has 1,700 employees in India, and three manufacturing sites.

Lenovo acquired Motorola, an American consumer electronics manufacturer, in 2014. The Chinese technology major makes desktops and personal computers locally, besides all Motorola smartphones sold in India. Exports of mobile phones to North American markets began last year. In November, it launched personal computers whose motherboards were locally made, making it compliant with the government’s preferential market access policy and eligible for bidding for government contracts for personal computers.

“Whether it’s our wholly-owned manufacturing sites or partner sites, our goal is to continue to expand to increase capacity of Motorola, capacity that we would build on the PC side and where it makes sense to export PCs to other parts of the world. We’re starting to discuss producing and manufacturing servers locally, which I think is the next version of the PLI,” he added.

Vlad Rozanovich, president, infrastructure solution group, Lenovo, said that regulatory changes made by the US that restrict chipmakers such as Nvidia, Intel, and AMD from exporting advanced semiconductor products to China, make India a critical consideration for companies such as Lenovo. Therefore, the company needs to boost its manufacturing capabilities around data centre products, specifically high-end CPU-related products in India, either through manufacturing partners or on its own.

“When we look at our data centre business that is about a $10-billion business, and the growth rates that we have for this business to really show how we double that in the next five years. And so as part of that, India becomes very important partner for us from a manufacturing standpoint,” he added.

The company wants to deepen manufacturing capabilities here to benefit from the standpoints of economics, logistics and sustainability, as it would be able to build products closer to customers.
