Trending: Twitter's India business

Despite the face-off with the government, the microblogging giant's operations here are steadily expanding

NEHA ALAWADHI New Delhi, 8 July

The last few months have been stressful for Twitter in India given the way things have panned out between the microblogging platform and the Indian government. On the business front though, the controversy has probably helped Twitter more than harming it, at least if one looks at the numbers.

According to data intelligence platform Similarweb, the Twitter app's daily active users on Android increased to 10.03 million in May from 7.85 million in January 2021, a 27 per cent rise. Similarweb data shows that Twitter downloads on Android saw a dip to 3.4 million in February, but have been on the rise ever since.

This trend partly traces the trajectory of the controversies. The first face-off between the Indian government and Twitter, which has been in India since 2013, took place in late January/early February, when it was asked to take down several tweets related to the farmers' agitation that was taking place against controversial farm legislation. Twitter complied with some emergency orders, but it restored some content later. Things came to a head with the Indian Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY) serving a non-compliance notice to the platform.

Just when that controversy was beginning to seemingly subside, the IT ministry introduced a new set of rules for social media intermediaries, including Google, Facebook and WhatsApp, which place several compliance requirements on companies that have more than 50,00,000 registered users. Essentially, under the new rules, the firm has to appoint a resident grievance officer, a compliance officer and a nodal officer.
