Important to assess risk of replacing humans with tech: PwC survey

SHUBHRA TANDON
Mumbai, February 23

ALIGNING INDIVIDUAL GOALS to organisational purpose has become critical in a hybrid world; however, a large proportion of India Inc leaders feel unsure about the future of work, according to the latest findings by PwC. Cost pressures, competing investments or priorities, lack of systems and data, and organisational culture are the biggest inhibitors faced by India leaders in creating a more fit-for-future workplace.

While 50% of India leaders agree that there is a need to plan for multiple possible futures around the workplace and workforce, cost pressure and the fear of setting a precedent holds them back from taking action, finds PwC India's 'People and Culture First: Transformation Journey in the future of work' report.

According to the findings, 48% of India leaders agree it is important to identify the potential risks associated with replacing human work with technology, but are reluctant to create a culture of transparency. Also, 54% of India leaders realise the importance of identifying the risks needed to keep pace with the changing times. However, they are reluctant to take action due to competing priorities.
