RECIPE FOR SUCCESS

When design rules narrative

MAYURI NIKUMBH
Head of design
Conran Design Mumbai

MY CANNES 2024 journey was an adventure before it even started — I almost missed being on the Jury due to a missed confirmation email. Thankfully, a very persistent organiser reached out through social media, almost reprimanding me! In a way, this set the tone for the focus and diligence the task would require — combing through more than 300 entries over three months via three rounds alongside a very diverse and accomplished jury line-up.

As a practicing designer and design leader, it is a constant endeavour to find inspiration and deliver meaningful yet differentiated work. Work that raises the bar not just within the team and for the company but also for the country. Being a part of the Design Lions jury, therefore, brought in immense anticipation and excitement to witness path-breaking work from all across the globe. And the experience delivered on the promise.

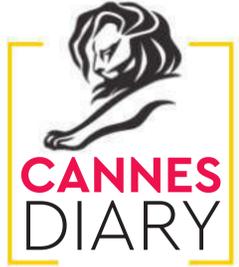

Initially, I went in with a fairbit of assumption expecting a lot of tech and AI (artificial intelligence) prevalence. Happy to report, I was delightfully dumbstruck to witness design solutions that were impactful in the most humble and unexpected ways — moving as much towards a new kind of analogue as emotion-driven tech. Here is what I came back with and what will stay with me as fire and fodder to my inspiration:

METALS SO FAR

On Day 4 of the Cannes Lions festival, Leo Burnett bagged a Silver for an Oreo campaign, while Ogilvy took home a Bronze for its campaign for Vi. This brings India's total Lions tally to 14 — 2 Golds, 5 Silvers and 7 Bronzes

Design you can taste: Food is becoming a new sensory dimension to fuel powerful design narratives. It is engaging consumers to bring them closer to culture, demystify myths, educate them towards environmental issues or simply bring joy. Design is transforming beyond the packaging — it has permeated inside and is using the contents to impact narratives.

Questioning with creativity: Design has always empowered political and social movements, but this year's entries went further, questioning authority, mocking power, and even finding solutions to wicked social problems. It was unsettling to see a concept car for black people addressing racism, a website to combat inflation, and an installation highlighting the struggles of those with conviction histories.

Measurable impact: What happens when statistics and numbers start translating into actionable solutions? This year showcased the beauty of data visualisation in design, illustrating environmental impact via a dynamic brand identity that measured real-time declining planet health and even empowered children to make informed decisions to avoid mindless digital scrolling.

Increasing spectrum of inclusivity: Being inclusive is no more just about gender or colour — this year's entries showed us, it is also about migrants, indigenous tribes and even addicts. A simple paper napkin provided migrants with the knowledge of their rights, wearable tech aided people with speech disorders, and a simple flag brought attention to increasing crime against the LGBTQ+ community.

Post judging days, I was invited to conduct a design tour for the festival attendees. As I revisited some of the most impactful work, I realised what moved and inspired a jury from 10 different countries, cultures and languages was not just honest simplicity but universal humanity.

That is the power good design wields and I feel immense pride in representing an industry capable of transforming not just narratives but societies.

I come back with a promise to myself to carry that torch and make the journey from the jury room to the stage — soon!

No CCTVs, unguarded strong-rooms: NEET review finds huge gaps

DEEKSHA TERI
New Delhi, June 20

A THIRD-PARTY REVIEW of the National Eligibility cum Entrance Test (NEET) undergraduate exam this year found some worrying "non-compliances" at a number of exam centres on May 5. These included the absence of the mandated two working CCTVs in exam rooms; and examples of strong-rooms, where question papers are stored at the exam centre, being left unguarded.

Sources said the National Testing Agency (NTA) — which conducts NEET-UG and is under fire for alleged irregularities included allegations of paper leak — was officially informed of the third-party review findings on June 16, almost 12 days after the examination results were announced.

For the review, the third party had visited 399 exam centres (of a total of approximately 4,000) that were mutually discussed and agreed upon by NTA and the reviewing party.

The review exercise, carried out on the day of the exam, found that of the 399 exam centres visited on the day of the exam, 186, or 46%, did not have two working CCTV cameras, as mandated, installed in each exam room. The live feed of these cameras is transmitted to the Central Control Room at the NTA headquarters in New Delhi which is meant to be monitored by a team of experts.

Further, at 68 (or 16%) of the 399 sample of exam centres, the strong-room was not "secured by guard". As a rule, the strong-room should have been guarded till the time of distribution of question papers.

Also, at 83 centres, the biometric staff was not the same as the designated staff meant for the respective centres.

The objective of the review

Panel formed to look into NTA's functioning

MANU KAUSHIK
New Delhi, June 20

EDUCATION MINISTER Dharmendra Pradhan on Thursday formed a high-level committee to look into the functioning of the National Testing Agency (NTA), which is under fire over alleged irregularities in the NEET-UG (Nation Eligibility cum Entrance Test-Undergraduate) and UGC-NET (University Grants Commission-National Eligibility Test) examinations.

Saying that the guilty would be brought to justice, he said: "The government will protect the interests of students. Our aim is to have zero errors in examinations."

Opposition Congress has alleged that aspirants paid large sums of money to get the NEET-UG question paper ahead of the exam. Pradhan had earlier called the charges of paper leaks 'baseless'.

"After confessions from arrested students, the government must cancel the exams... So many students are going to suffer if it's not cancelled," Gaurav Tyagi, founder at Career Xpert, told FE.

is to identify non-compliance of laid-down guidelines or any prima facie malpractices during the exam at the centre on the day of the examination.

For the review exercise, the observer, deployed by the third party, has a detailed checklist to verify: physical controls at examination centres (jammers are functioning, covering all required rooms, physical security, access to the exam centre, physical movement at centre, frisking as per requirement); seating arrangement against the allotted seats; presence of required number of invigilators, CCTV staff, among other requirements.

The NTA has been at the receiving end of a lot of criticism due to issues with the NEET-UG results announced on June 4, on the day of the Lok Sabha election results.

First, an unusually large number of candidates (67) got the perfect score of 720/720 and some candidates got 718 or 719 — marks others claimed were not possible in the scheme of the exam. The NTA attributed this to a combination of factors including a relatively easier paper, the decision to award additional marks to students who lost time during the exam because of errors and delays on the part of NTA staff and invigilators, and an incorrect question.

The NTA is also facing allegations of question paper leak in Bihar with the state police having arrested 13 people.
