World Bank report shows 'massive gaps' in systems to track poor countries' debts

REUTERS Washington, November 10

EXISTING SYSTEMS FOR tracking the sovereign debts of the poorest countries are inadequate and mask hidden debts, and they are likely to owe far more than the record levels currently estimated, World Bank chief economist Carmen Reinhart said.

The multilateral development bank on Wednesday released the first comprehensive assessment of global and national debt surveillance systems, saying it found "massive gaps" in the ability to track how much each country owes — and to whom.

The current patchwork of databases — with different standards and definitions — meant debt estimates could be off by as much as 30% of a country's gross domestic product, the report found, noting that 40% of low-income countries had published no data on their sovereign debt at all for over two years.

The World Bank, long critical of the lending practices of China, the world's biggest creditor, last month said the debt burden of low-income countries rose 12% to a record $860 billion here in 2020, and called for comprehensive efforts to help low- and middle-income countries reach more sustainable debt levels.

Reinhart told Reuters the actual number could be "markedly higher" and said the new study underscored the need for reforms to ensure better debt statistics, coordinated data collection, and integrated debt management systems. She said the opaque nature of many debt contracts and the private sector's complete failure to participate in a G20 debt relief initiative clouded the prospects for timely debt restructuring efforts for low- and middle-income countries. The bank estimates 12% of low-income countries are already in debt distress, and 44% are at high risk of getting there.

The potential default of a poor country like Chad — the first country to seek restructuring under the G20's Common Framework — would not affect the global financial system, but even middle-income countries faced growing risks, and that could ultimately affect global growth prospects, she said.

Developing economies, including China, now account for 60% of global GDP, up from less than 40% during the last big debt crisis of the 1980s, which means that a new debt crisis could have a significant impact on the global economy, she said.
