Secure your future with zero cost term insurance

Salem, Sept 7: Working life has been increasingly extending beyond 60 for a large chunk of the population. As a result, life insurers are designing policies that continue to function well beyond 60 and up to 70 and even 75 years of age. Since many buyers are unsure of the need for cover after they turn 60, companies are designing a 'zero cost' extended term cover where the premium paid is returned to the policyholder (without interest) if they cancel the policy early.

Bajaj Allianz Life and Max Life are among those that have launched such policies and other life companies are working on them. Many countries have increased their retirement age with increasing life expectancy. However, it is tough for senior citizens to buy life cover, and there is also uncertainty over the need for such a cover

While customers can cancel all policies, it is for the first time that insurers are returning the higher premium collected. Because insurers charge a 'level' premium across the policy's maturity, the annual premium on a policy that matures at 70 would be higher than a premium that matures at 60.
