Online gaming firms gain as users loosen purse strings

Sales of in-app items, India-specific pricing, use of UPI power monetization in gaming

Shouvik Das

NEW DELHI

After years of stagnation, e-sports and video game firms in India have begun generating in-game and advertisement revenues, thanks to India-specific in-game items, a stronger competitive gaming scene, and widespread use of the Unified Payments Interface (UPI) as a convenient last-mile payment method.

An industry report by Google and venture capital firm Lumikai, released on 2 November, pegged the annual average revenue per user (ARPU) for India's gaming industry to have reached ₹1,600 by FY23-end, rising tenfold in the past four financial years. While some stakeholders in leading e-sports firms consider it to be at the upper limit of gamer monetization in India, the projected figure may well be heading in the right direction.

Krafton, the Korea-based publisher of popular e-sports title Battle Grounds Mobile India (formerly FGO Mobile), is seeing repeated monetization of in-app offerings. Sean Hyunil Sohn, chief executive of Krafton India attributes it to aligning the pricing of in-game offerings with Indian consumer preferences, and India-specific in-game items. "Monetization is definitely more difficult in India than in other parts of the world. Overall revenue that gaming companies earn from India remains lower than other markets of now, but India's massive number of users gives plenty of opportunities for it to change.

To do this, we are looking at offering India-specific pricing and other similar monetization strategies, to normalize pricing for in-game items," Sohn said in an interview.

While Sohn did not divulge its India revenue, industry estimates peg BGM revenues at $10 billion in India in FY23 from $7 billion in FY22, given its increasing popularity in terms of its active user base. "There are encouraging signs from the India market—of course, the monetization amount is still lower than some other global markets. But, Indian gamers are showing increasing encouragement to pay for in-game bundles. We're revising the pricing for some items—bundles that were priced at $499 as per global markets are revised to ₹199 to make them more accessible to more gamers. The advent of UPI, too, is helping, since most gamers play on smartphones. This is helping us build a strong base in India, that is already strategically important due to the vast number of gamers here."

This trend is fuelling optimism among more gaming firms. Roby John, co-founder and chief executive of e-sports firm Supergaming said according to internal research, there are "multiple games in India making $100 million, spearheaded by the Battle Royale genre".

"A lot of this spending by player is driven by in-game cosmetics like skins. Also from our research gleaned directly from players via our play-tests for Indus held over the year, there is a demand by gamers to embrace Indian culture in their games through self-expression. These two factors result in tremendous upside that we hope to see when we launch Indus next year."

Ashish Rathke, the co-founder and executive director of Nazara subsidiary, Nodwin Gaming, said the uptick in monetization is happening due to an increasing number of gamers paying more for hobbyist titles. "Two years ago, India had a base of around 400 million gamers, who would contribute 11 in revenue, driven by ads. Today, there is a correlation to users paying for streaming services, driving nearly 150 million users out of the gamer base to pay around $25-30 per user for casual games, which are often labelled as 'time pass'. It is this user base that is gradually converting to those paying $600 every two months for an in-game Battle Pass on titles such as BGMI. It is this that is fuelling a hockey-stick curve of growth in monetization for gaming in India, which will drive up monetization of in-game items exponentially in the next one to three years," Rathke said.

India's gamer base, according to the Google-Lumikai report, will be at 568 million in FY23. UPI has over 300 million unique users, along with 500 million merchants. The growing monetizable user base, an executive who works for a global esports firm said, is boosting revenue for e-sports and video gaming firms. However, there are still challenges along the way, he added.

JioCinema adds mid-size web shows in play for volume

JioCinema's budget is roughly half the size of Netflix.

JioCinema, owned by Reliance Industries, is adopting a measured approach to its web original strategy by focusing on mid-sized web shows, with estimated annual budget of about $1,000 crore, excluding sports. This budget is roughly half the size of leading competitors like Netflix as the platform's current strategy on web originals is driven by volume primarily to sustain an audience interest, post-IPL.

While industry experts said that certain titles such as Taali and Asur 2 gained traction and secured top spots on viewership charts, it is evident that JioCinema is targeting a mass-viewing space in the streaming market in India.

Media consultancy Ormax, said Asur 2 ranked fourth in most-watched Hindi webshow in the first half of 2023, accumulated impressive viewership of 19.3 million. In comparison, Shahid Kapoor's Blood was the most-watched Hindi film, with 16.6 million viewers.

The attraction of free programming provided by JioCinema attracts viewers; however, experts suggest that building lasting recall and successful franchises, particularly for tier-two and three audiences, will be an endeavour.

Uday Sodhi, senior partner, Kurate Digital Consulting, said sports could skew the entire conversation differently, but players like Netflix or Amazon Prime are spending far more in terms of creating high-impact shows with significant investments per-episode. "Where Jio scores is in creating velocity and making sure volume is higher. For JioCinema, cricket is driving users to download the app whereas the mid-scale web shows are only providing reasons to stay on," Sodhi said.

Industry insiders said platforms like Netflix and Amazon Prime allocate a minimum of ₹40 crore per show for their annual 10-12 high-profile originals, besides substantial investments in acquiring various Indian language movies. JioCinema offers movies, including those produced in-house by Jio Studios.

Karan Taurani, senior vice-president at Elara Capital Ltd, said expenditure is essential, especially as JioCinema pivots towards advertising video-on-demand and mass-market viewers. Netflix leads in spending, followed by Amazon Prime, headed, JioCinema and ZEE5 are expected to invest 50% of the budgets of Netflix.

JioCinema did not respond to queries on its investments, a senior executive said removing paywalls was a significant shift, unlocking the potential of Indian consumers to access premium content.
