Adani's open offer for 26% stake in NDTV gets Sebi nod

Approval allows Adani to buy more equity from minority shareholders

BHUMA SHRIVASTAVA
14 November

Gautam Adani's conglomerate received the regulatory nod to float an open offer for a further 26 per cent stake in New Delhi Television (NDTV), marking a crucial milestone in a takeover battle between the billionaire and the broadcaster's founders.

The Securities and Exchange Board of India, or Sebi, approved Adani Group's open offer, according to a statement on the market regulator's website on Monday, allowing Adani to buy more equity from the media firm's minority shareholders. The conglomerate revised the offer's roll out date to November 22. It will close on December 5, NDTV said last week.

Gautam Adani is now one step closer to gaining a larger footprint in the country's media sector. The billionaire — whose personal fortune is valued at almost $138 billion — gained the most globally this year.

Adani's initial plan was to launch its open offer last month, but was delayed as it awaited Sebi's approval. The billionaire's ports-to-power conglomerate triggered a hostile takeover bid for the broadcaster after it acquired an indirect 29.18 per cent stake in August.

NDTV's founders — Prannoy Roy and Radhika Roy — have opposed the bid, amid concerns that the transaction will erode press freedom in the world's largest democracy. Adani is now one step closer to gaining a larger footprint in country's media sector. The billionaire — whose personal fortune valued at almost $138 billion has gained the most globally this year — is rapidly diversifying his empire beyond its cornerstone of coal mining and ports to branch into airports, data centres, cement and digital services.

Adani Group has offered to buy NDTV shares at ₹294 rupees ($3.6 million) each, while the media firm's stock closed 24 per cent higher at ₹364.85 rupees on Monday in Mumbai.

80% of the nation may get 5G by next festival season

SURAJET DAS GUPTA
New Delhi, 14 November

Telecom gear companies have put together a 5G network roll-out plan with service providers to install new radios at an average of 160,000 towers per operator by September-October or during the festival season next year.

The vendors say this will ensure coverage in all metros, cities, and towns and will cover 80 per cent of the country geographically. Vendors will be shipping over 1.4 million radios or assembling them in India on different spectrum bands. There is one rider, though. The chip shortage, which has eased considerably of late, should not return.

A leading telecom vendor executive said around 10,000 towers have so far been connected across 8-10 cities where services have begun. "We expect smooth availability of 5G radios which have to be installed by January and after that, we will see coverage going up day by day and by October, metros, most cities and towns will have coverage," he said.

Sources in Airtel say that they have been installing 1,500-1,600 towers a week.

Data from the Digital Infrastructure Providers' Association India shows that India has close to 7.2 lakh towers which include those on roofs and the ground and mounted on masts. But only 36 per cent of them (2.6 lakh towers) are fibreised and this is a key requirement for handling 5G data which requires a high bandwidth.

Clearly, most of these towers will be on 5G (some will be common among telcos). There will also be an additional number of towers which will use E band spectrum, which is being given to Bharti Airtel and Reliance Jio instead of fibre for 5G backhaul.

The requirement for radios will be massive. Telecom vendors say that Reliance Jio is installing six radios per tower — three each in the 3.5 GHz band, the key band for 5G, as well as

■ Firms have put together a plan to install new radios at an average of 160,000 towers per operator by next year

■ Over 1.4 million new radios will be installed, straddling 3.5 GHz and 700 MHz

■ Only 36 per cent of 720,000 towers are fibreised. Most of them will be enabled with 5G in the first phase of the roll-out

■ 26 GHz band radios — the band which provides very high speed but in a limited coverage area — will be hosted through antennas on street furniture, offices, etc, but it will only happen in the second stage will use E band spectrum, which is being given to Bharti Airtel and Reliance Jio instead of fibre for 5G backhaul.

The requirement for radios will be massive. Telecom vendors say that Reliance Jio is installing six radios per tower — three each in the 3.5 GHz band, the key band for 5G, as well as in the 700 MHz, which only Reliance Jio has bought to increase its coverage all over the country.

Experts say Jio is offering stand-alone 5G in which the core as well as the radios are 5G.

Sources say that Bharti Airtel is putting in 2-3 radios in the 3.5 GHz band as it has not bought the 700 MHz band and will be using its existing bands for coverage. It is offering the non-standalone 5G service in which the core which controls the network is still on 4G. Both Jio and Airtel declined to talk about their roll-out officially.

The Department of Telecommunications (DoT) has been keeping a close tab on the progress of the network roll out since Prime Minister Narendra Modi launched 5G in October.

Responding to complaints from subscribers on the unavailability of 5G or that their 5G phones have not even been activated, the DoT and the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology have intervened.

In response, telcos have promised to increase the pace of their deployments by 9,000 in December to hit 10,000 towers a week in January. At that rate (40,000 towers a month), they can comfortably meet their targets.

Similarly, 160 plus 5G mobile devices are already 5G-enabled. Apple has offered its subscribers a beta version of software which they need to download to get their phones enabled for 5G stand-alone services.

Some 70 million subscribers had bought 5G phones even before the service was launched.
