"We're focusing on making sure that we integrate it directly into your workflows to fuel your creativity and deliver the power and precision that you expect from us."

In a two-hour-long keynote, held in the Peacock Theater in downtown Los Angeles, California, Adobe debuted several AI models, including Firefly Image 2 — the latest version of the original Firefly AI image generator that powers features like Photo

Adobe's chief business officer of digital media David Wadhvani at this year's MAX conference in Los Angeles

shop's Generative Fill. The new model is designed to offer higher-resolution images, with the ability to show details like foliage, skin texture, hair, hands, and facial features when rendering photorealistic humans. Adobe says Firefly Image 2 is available to try today via the web-based Firefly beta and is "coming soon" to Creative Cloud apps. It also announced two new Firefly models for generating vector images and design templates. Adobe claims its new Firefly Vector Model is the first generative AI for creating vector graphics via text prompts and envisions it being used for marketing and ad graphic creation, ideation, and mood boards.

Adobe entered the AI race earlier this year by introducing a new family of generative AI tools called Firefly that creates images, text effects, audio, vectors, and 3D for users. Adobe's Firefly is one of many generative artificial intelligence image tools, along with Midjourney, DALL-E, and Stable Diffusion. The company says people have generated more than 3 billion images through Adobe Firefly since it was announced earlier this year. The company behind Photoshop is taking a measured approach to rolling out AI features across its popular products and is engaging actively with the creative community through beta releases, hoping to get feedback to make future versions better. Firefly is based on the content found within Adobe's Stock library, publicly licensed content, and public domain content for which the license has lapsed. "We're committed to delivering the highest quality models in a thoughtful and responsible way, with transparency around the data on which they are trained and designed to be commercially safe," Narayan added.

Experts say that the AI-focused news at MAX demonstrates Adobe's strong focus on bringing generative AI into its suite of apps and services to generate media content and high-lights how enterprises are experimenting with AI. (The writer is in Los Angeles at the invitation of Adobe)

Behind hurdler's handwritten tribute to senior: 'Taught me how to clear hurdles'

NIHAL KOSHIE
New Delhi, October 11

WHEN JYOTHI YARRAJI, India's bright young hurdler, stood on the podium after winning the silver medal at the recent Asian Games in Hangzhou, at the back of the bib, which she had unpinned and held in her hand, was a handwritten message of gratitude: "Gautham, this is for you. We miss you".

Sai Gautham, who was also a hurdler, has a special place in Jyothi's heart. He was the one who spotted her talent, helped her get admission in a sports hostel in Hyderabad, and hand-held her during her early days before she became a star. Her first pair of Nike shoes was gifted by him.

When Gautham died on August 31, four days after he met with a road accident in Kakinada, Jyothi lost her mentor and guide. "Actually, I wanted to win a gold for him at the Asian Games. But it was not to be. The message on the bib

LIFTING UP

Sai Gautham, a hurdler, was the one who spotted Jyothi Yarraji's talent, helped her get admission in a sports hostel

She lost her guide when Gautham died on August 31, four days after he met with a road accident in Kakinada was my way of paying tribute to Gautham. I felt that I should dedicate the medal to him. He was always there for me... He was one of my seniors, he motivated me and inspired me in everything," Jyothi told The Indian Express on Wednesday.

HE WAS THE FIRST PERSON EVER TO TELL ME THAT I HAD TALENT. HE HAPPENED TO BE IN MY HOMETOWN (VISAKHAPATNAM) TO VISIT RELATIVES. HE SAW ME AT THE GROUND WHERE I WAS TRAINING... HE WAS LIKE A PARENT TO ME

At the Asian Games earlier this month, in an evening of drama in Hangzhou, officials first disqualified Jyothi and China's Yanni Wu for a false start. But after Jyothi and the Athletics Federation of India protested, she was allowed to run in the 100 metres hurdles final, and so was Wu.

Wu was eventually disqualified after the race, and Jyothi's bronze was upgraded to silver. China's Yuwei Lin won the gold.

Jyothi was hailed for standing up for herself, putting her point across to officials without getting perturbed, and holding her nerve to win a medal. An emotional Jyothi shed tears on the podium as she gripped the bib with Gautham's name on it.

"He was the first person ever to tell me that I had talent. He happened to be in my hometown (Visakhapatnam) to visit relatives. He saw me at the ground where I was training. This was in 2015, when I had just started out. He told me that there is a SAI hostel for talented athletes, and put in a word to a coach. He was my senior at the SAI hostel. He was like a parent to me," Jyothi recalled.

She said Gautham looked out for her when she was at the hostel, motivated her, gave her training tips, advised her on her diet, and also asked her to be more social. "I was very young, I was shy and did not mingle. I didn't have any experience, I had no idea what a sports hostel was about. He explained to me how to go about things, taught me how to run, how to clear the hurdles," Jyothi said.

When Jyothi needed a new pair of shoes, Gautham bought them for her. "It was the first Nike shoes that I had ever owned. I had Nivia shoes, and that itself was a big thing for me. But when I told him I was feeling a little pain, he got me a pair of Nike shoes," she said.

Car ratings may get tied to better connectivity

MUNSI VENGATTIL & ADITI SHAH
New Delhi, October 11

A GOVERNMENT PANEL has recommended that automakers who step up connectivity features in cars to communicate with other vehicles and external systems should win better ratings on crash tests, a draft report showed, in a bid to boost road safety.

In a country with high accident rates, the advice could force automakers to equip the connected cars, as they are known, with technology using the airwaves to send warnings between drivers, and communicate with road systems like traffic lights. "Most traffic issues occur because of non-line-of-sight scenarios," the government panel said in its 58-page draft, which is being reported for the first time by Reuters.

"Most sensors do not work well in these scenarios and V2X fills the gap," it added, referring to the connected car technology commonly known as vehicle-to-everything (V2X).

The panel wants V2X to be considered for inclusion in Bharat New Car Assessment Programme (NCAP) for car safety ratings, in line with developments abroad, but did not set any deadline for adoption of its recommendations. In Europe, the Euro NCAP rules recognise vehicle connectivity as a key milestone in crash avoidance and car ratings, the report added, while China and the United States are among the nations evaluating similar rules to improve safety. Carmakers in India have begun work on advanced connectivity features in vehicles but have not firmed up a timeline, said an industry source aware of companies' discussions, who spoke on condition of anonymity. The report will now be reviewed by the communication ministry, and the road ministry, to decide on implementation. —REUTERS

SAFETY ROADMAP

India is set to release technical blueprint for connected cars. Move reflects steps being weighed by China, Europe and the US.

Proposes V2X integration in cars to cut accidents, congestion. Communication, road ministries to decide next steps.
