Satin Creditcare is better off in COVID-19 times due to rural presence, says H P Singh

A law graduate and fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of India, H P SINGH, has come a long way since he first set his foot into the microfinance space...

In an interview with Free Press Journal's Jeslicia Karayampambail and R N Bhaskar, Singh talks about the position of microfinance institutions (MFIs) today.

Given below are edited excerpts:

COVID-19 has hurt the industry. So, how do you see your position at this time?

This is where the difference between the urban and rural divide comes into play. The pandemic has hurt the urban economy much more than the rural economy...

There is more traction in loan repayments in the rural economy. Only 11 per cent of our borrowers have taken the moratorium option...

Around 90 per cent of our portfolio is directly rural and the remaining 20 per cent is semi-urban which has fringes of rural in it.

Which means you do not fear delinquencies the way urban lenders may face?

There is a sharp difference in the way urban and rural lenders will look at this pandemic. The delinquencies will be slightly higher in the urban area rather than in the rural area.

In the rural sector, farmers are honest people who pay their dues. But politicians have corrupted the atmosphere through loan waivers among other things. What is your take on that?

what they have witnessed (those bad days). It is only due to the politicians — who do not look at the interest of the borrower, but at ways to gain votes — that MFIs are in such a position.

What is your wish list for the government?

The government should encourage a change in perception of MFIs. Even today, despite doing all that we have done, the government does not recognise or give us the status that the industry deserves.

What is the time frame that you are looking at for normalisation in business?

It is not completely normal today. With 'Unlock-4' happening, I think it will take two months from now for things to stabilise and normalcy to return.

How is the position of your collections and liquidity?

Our collection efficiency stands at 85-86 per cent during COVID-19 times. Our liquidity position is very good. We have got funds under a targeted liquidity scheme...

Would that mean you will not go for any funding raising exercise? True, we will not. We have enough liquidity.
