Pro-boxer Goyat to face off against Paul

New Delhi, Feb 28: The ongoing saga between internet sensation Jake Paul and Indian pro-boxer Neeraj Goyat has reached a boiling point as the two rivals engaged in a dramatic face-to-face encounter on the streets of Puerto Rico.

Amidst the tension and anticipation, Goyat boldly declared, "I'll smack your head off," solidifying his unwavering determination to settle the score with Paul once and for all. "Jake Paul, I'm the man of my word. I'm here. I'm in your country. I'm here in your town. I'm here in your gym. man. Now abuse... You are using a translation application and you are abusing the Indian language. Now abuse," declared Neeraj, the 32-year-old boxer who had previously given a shout out, Jake Paul responded using a Hindi translator, further fueling the intensity of their exchange.

Goyat's bold declaration stems from a deep-rooted determination that has been brewing for months, marked by an unyielding pursuit to confront Jake Paul head-on. Across various social media platforms, particularly on his Instagram feed, Goyat has been a relentless force, consistently issuing challenges to Paul. Each post has served as a rallying cry, urging Paul to step into the ring and face him like a true competitor, according to a media release.

With each passing day, Goyat's obsession with confronting Paul has only intensified, fueling his determination to settle their differences in a direct confrontation.

His social media accounts have become a platform for his unwavering resolve, as he tirelessly pursues the opportunity to face Paul in the ring. Goyat's relentless pursuit has garnered attention from fans, media, and the boxing community at large, creating an atmosphere of anticipation and excitement surrounding the potential showdown.

As the tension between the two fighters reached its peak on the streets of Puerto Rico, Goyat's months-long campaign culminated in a dramatic face-to-face encounter, emphasizing the depth of his commitment to proving himself against Paul.

In response, 'The Problem Child' attempted to undermine Goyat's resolve, implying that the Indian pro-boxer was unable to handle his verbal jabs and lacked genuine interest in engaging in a physical bout. Paul responded by saying, "You came to see me. But it seems like you're not up for a fight. Can't take a bit of banter? Are you feeling hurt? I respect you for facing me directly, but it seems like you're not willing to fight." Accusing Paul of resorting to a translator application to hurl insults in a regional Indian language, Goyat made his intentions clear: to confront Paul directly and settle their differences in a physical showdown.

The upcoming clash promises to be historic, as Neeraj Goyat aims to leave an enduring impact on the global stage, showcasing the strength, skill, and fearlessness of Indian boxers

Spotting and Killing the Mosquito..!

Since the mosquito menace is spreading and the municipality has asked citizens in the city to spot the mosquito carrying the dreaded dengue, I thought I'd do my bit for the country:

"What are you admiring your arm for?" I asked my wife.

"Sssshh!!" I whispered, "you'll scare it away."

"Scare what away?" she asked, puzzled.

"The mosquito on my arm," I whispered back.

"Kill it," she roared.

"Wait!" I whispered hoarsely.

"Kill it!" she said again.

"Wait!" I said, "I'm looking for its stripes."

"Stripes?"

"If it's a tiger mosquito it will have stripes."

"And you shouldn't kill it?"

"No," I said, "we have to inform the municipality."

"That there's a tiger in the house?"

"That there's an aegypti mosquito in the vicinity."

"What's that?"

"It's a mosquito that carries the virus."

"Kill it!" roared the wife as she slapped my arm with the newspaper and laid flat the poor fellow.

"Now I'll never know," I said looking at the smashed insect with crestfallen eyes.

"You'll never know what?" asked the wife.

"Whether it's a tiger or not."

"So who cares," she said.

"The municipality," I said, "the commissioner has said it's the duty of the citizens to keep an alert for the mosquito."

"That's why you were staring at your arm?"

"Yes," I said, "I was trying to be a good citizen."

"And if you were bitten by it while looking at it?"

"I expect that's the risk he expects us to take as good citizens," I said.

"Something like giving up your life for the country?" asked the wife cynically.

"Yeah," I said.

"I guess they'll give you a medal posthumously for such gallantry? "I'll have to go to Delhi next Republic Day and get decorated on your behalf!"

"Why?" I asked, "I'll go myself."

"You'll be dead," said the wife, "killed in action while spotting the tiger."

"I don't think I like the idea," I said uncomfortably.

"Of me getting the medal?"

"About me being dead."

"Then why don't you tell the municipality," said the wife.

"Tell them what?"

"That if they ask citizens to do their jobs which is actually fumigating the city and keeping it mosquito free, then they will soon be unemployed and jobless," said the wife. "What are you staring at?"

"Nothing," I said quickly as I killed the mosquito on my arm and decided I would not help the poor municipal workers lose their jobs..!
