When Christopher Nationalism saved a mob

MM BUREAU

New Delhi/January 07

Two mattresses, muddled and littered with glass shards, lay dishevelled on the floor of a room in JNU's Sabarwati hostel. On a shelf next to them lay a copy of 'Marx, Engels and Lenin on Historical Materialism', an entry pass for a research workshop, and an empty coffee mug — all covered by a thin film of white powder.

The white powder was the residue from a fire extinguisher that lay discarded in the middle of the room on Monday. The extinguisher was used to break open the door, moments before some students who had taken shelter inside managed to escape through the balcony.

A Kashmiri student lives in this room that was particularly targeted by the mob. Some of the attackers were repeatedly asking for the room in which the Kashmiri lived," said Surya Prakash, a visually challenged student thrashed by the mob.

This room was among the most vandalised in the hostel. The mob that charged into the hostel on Sunday evening did not spare much, except the women's hostel section, which was protected by the inmates who formed a human chain to ward them off.

We call this 'mob' as it was a mob of students who were targeted by the mob. The mob that charged into the hostel on Sunday evening did not spare much, except the women's hostel section, which was protected by the inmates who formed a human chain to ward them off.

Community, Hindu-Muslims live in Madrasa Camps and I feel very happy in talking to them because I found that they have no misconception about it but some people are deliberately creating misconception and mispropaganda in society (P.Rel)
