WE PRODUCE PCs LOCALLY: LENOVO INDIA 'See no impact from laptop import curbs'

JATIN GROVER New Delhi, August 8

TECHNOLOGY MAJOR LENOVO does not see any impact from the government's recent restrictions on imports of laptops, personal computers (PCs), tablets and servers.

The reason for Lenovo not being affected by the government's restrictions, which will be applicable from November 1, is that the company has its own PC manufacturing unit in Pudukcherry.

"We are in discussions with the government with regard to escalating our make-in-India plans. The recent decision by the government is in accordance with increasing the manufacturing base in India and we are already doing that," Sehgal said.

"These manufacturing units as well as a strong supply chain ecosystem in India will also help Lenovo to leverage its 'pocket-to-cloud' strategy, which is providing a complete infrastructure portfolio to companies, including the data centre services, servers, storage, as well as managing their devices and other digital requirements," Sehgal added.

"The Pudukcherry plant has been in operation since 1999. Besides Lenovo's popular IdeaPad notebook computers, the facility also manufactures products across the firm's full consumer and commercial range. On its plans to leverage benefits under the revised IT hardware PLI, the company said it yet to make a decision on that. "While we are yet to take decision on Lenovo's plans to leverage PLI 2.0, it offers us the opportunity to scale our PC manufacturing capacity in India, contributing to our global manufacturing footprint," Shailendra Katyal, managing director of Lenovo India, said in response to a query by FE.

sights on exports. We have come a long way," Katyal added.

In the smartphone business, the company owns the Motorola brand, and has tied-up with Dixon Technologies for its manufacturing in India. "100% of Motorola's smartphones for India are made in India with a significant proportion being exported around the world," the company said.

"We are not more only a PC company. We are a service provider, meaning that we will access the digital requirements of companies and we will take care of all the devices from an end to end basis," Sehgal said.

When asked about the falling revenues from the PC business, Sehgal said the demand for devices or PCs is cyclic in nature.

"When during a quarter people buy devices, the demand decreases in subsequent quarters. Further, owing to global macroeconomic situations, there are some quarters when the demand goes down as compared to the previous quarters, but it is still high as compared to pre-Covid level," he said.

According to Sehgal, an expanded portfolio with value addition and seamless integration of multiple devices is the element which Lenovo is getting traction for, apart from its 'as-a-service' IT infrastructure solutions.
