RETAIL OFFTAKE SLOWED TO 15% THIS SEASON: BROKERAGES Cheer missing in festival sales growth: Nomura

FE BUREAU New Delhi, November 5

MIXED RESULTS

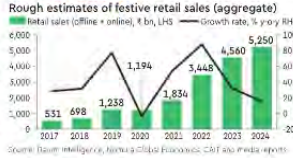

RETAIL SALES (OFFLINE and online) during the festive season increased by about 15% year-on-year in 2024, much lower than 32% or so in 2023 and 88% in 2022, Nomura Global Research wrote in a note on Tuesday, citing rough estimates based on anecdotal data.

"Demand is holding up in rural areas and in tier-2/3 cities, but urban metros and industrial demand are weak," it said, adding that the overall results look mixed for consumption.

Festive retail sales growth is slower for offline stores and higher for online e-commerce platforms, with the latter driven primarily by tier-2 and tier-3 cities.

Economist Sonal Varma believes the Indian economy has entered a cyclical growth slowdown and coincident and leading growth indicators point to a further moderation in the gross domestic product growth.

"We see rising downside risks to our GDP growth projections of 6.7% in FY25 and 6.8% in FY26, both of which ger vehicle sales have been soft and driven by heavy discounting, while the continued contraction in sales of medium and heavy commercial vehicles points to weak industrial activity, the report pointed out.

"Urban consumption indicators have been softening, and there is evidence that companies are scaling down their salary outlays," it added. Among the trends noticed this time is the increased reliance of customers on loans to finance their purchases.

Amazon reported 50% year-on-year increase in usage of its "Amazon Pay (ICICI) bank credit card" in 2024, up from 25% in FY23. Also, demand for gold is lower in volume terms due to higher gold prices, and spot airfares have dropped due to subdued demand. Data as of September showed air passenger traffic growth was largely flat, despite the onset of festivals, and spot airfares for major domestic routes during Diwali declined by up to 32%, partly due to subdued demand, Nomura said, citing media reports.

are already below RBI projections (FY25: 7.2%; FY26: 7.3%)," Varma wrote. Hard data for October show stronger growth in two-wheeler sales, reflecting steady rural demand. "The recovering rural economy contributed to better two-wheeler and tractor sales, although the latter is picking up from a very low base," the report observed. On the other hand, passen-

Need Ranji-type pitches for home Tests, says WV Raman

VENKATA KRISHNA B November 5

WVRAMAN, FORMER INDIA BATSMAN AND COACH

RATHER THAN ASKING WHY WE DON'T GET TURNING TRACKS IN DOMESTIC CRICKET, WHY ARE WE NOT GIVING GOOD TRACKS FOR TEST CRICKET?

THE FAILURE of skipper Rohit Sharma and Virat Kohli to effectively deal with spin-friendly tracks in the O-3 home debate against New Zealand was attributed to their absence from domestic cricket for the last decade.

However, the likes of Yashvee Jaiswal and Sarfaraz Khan, who have played a lot in the Ranji Trophy in the last few years, were not able to stand up to be counted when it mattered the most.

Former India batsman and coach WV Raman believes the conditions for Ranji Test matches have hardly any similarity to surfaces the players encounter in domestic cricket. He says: Tests should be played on traditional good pitches that batsmen coming through the ranks get.

"Why are we not giving the conditions for Ranji Tests should be played on traditional good pitches that batsmen coming through the ranks get. If we are not giving the conditions for Ranji Tests should be played on traditional good pitches that batsmen coming through the ranks get. If we are not giving the conditions for Ranji Tests should be played on traditional good pitches that batsmen coming through the ranks get..."

"Rather than asking why we don't get turning tracks in domestic cricket, why are we not giving good tracks for Test cricket? In recent times, the Indian pace attack is much feared. Why do we think that our bowlers can't get 20 wickets in this adds up. It was nine seasons ago and the lack of good spinners and also the (diminishing) ability of batsmen to play against good spinners is obvious well as raging turners. In recent times when we are suddenly wake up when we don't get results in Test cricket?," Raman asks.

He recalls the uproar when any team in domestic cricket rolled out a ragging turner. "In domestic cricket, whenever a track was given which allowed spin, the entire nation would go up in arms. Our current set of batsmen didn't drop from heaven. They came through the same system. Just give them proper pitches to showcase their skills," he argues.

Players key, not pitches Having coached extensively in domestic cricket and also internationally, Raman believes changing pitches in Ranji Trophy won't help. "How many of these players have played 4-day or 5-day games in the recent past, except in this Duleep Trophy? The international schedule doesn't give time. So that is something we also need to look at. It is not about the kind of tracks that we give in domestic cricket, it is the kind of frequency of red ball cricket that they play."

We tend to be reactive. The 6-run grass rule, for example, produced nothing good for Indian cricket. Decent medium pacers were looked upon as unplayable bowlers. Batsmen just confidence and spinners were not part of the game. All demands to know. Over the past decade on the domestic circuit, teams rolling out ragging turners has become a trend with BCCI coming up with various dictates to curb this propensity. In the aftermath of the O-4 series losses in England and Australia in 2011-12, the then technical committee of the board made firm of grass on pitches mandatory in the 2014-15 season. However, the practice was discontinued the following season following complaints from

Apple explores push into smart glasses with 'Atlas' user study

MARK GURMAN November 5

Apple also plans to revamp the Vision Pro headset

APPLE IS EXPLORING a push into smart glasses with an internal study of products currently on the market, setting the stage for the company to follow Meta Platforms into an increasingly popular category.

The initiative, code-named Atlas, got underway last week and involves gathering feedback from Apple employees on smart glasses, according to people with knowledge of the matter. Additional focus groups are planned for the near future, said the sources, who asked not to be identified because the work is secret. The studies are being led by Apple's Product Systems Quality team, part of the hardware engineering division.

"Testing and developing products that all can come to love is very important to what we do at Apple," the group wrote in an email to select employees at the company's headquarters in Cupertino, California. "This is why we are looking for participants to join us in an upcoming user study with current market smart glasses."

When Apple is considering whether to enter a new category, it often loses secret focus groups to understand what people like about existing products. The company typically relies on employees — rather than customers — so it can avoid making its plans public. Apple representative for Apple declined to comment. Last month, Bloomberg News reported on another internal study. The company tested an app for people with presbyopia that tracks their blood-sugar changes and diet.

The latest study suggests that Apple is moving forward with its own work on smart glasses, Bloomberg previously reported that the iPhone maker device — something that could be worn all day and potentially replace the iPhone. Work on that project has spurred due to numerous technical challenges.

Meta, meanwhile, found success with a more stripped-down formula. Its $299 glasses, created in partnership with Luxotica Group, aren't true AR spectacles. They don't overlay information on the glass. But they let users shoot video, take phone calls and ask questions to an AI assistant.

New Apple is looking to create something similar. Its approach could involve making smart glasses that work like its already popular AirPods earbuds. A version in glasses form would allow for more battery life, sensors and improved audio technology.

But Apple's real move is moving forward with recent months. Meta and Snap both previewed AR glasses — models that can blend the real world with digital overlays of games, text messages and apps. Neither product will be ready for consumers for at least a few years, though. The current prototypes are more about getting app developers to buy into the concept. — BLOOMBERG

Australian university signs pact with Apollo Hospitals

MANU KAUSHIK New Delhi, November 5

AUSTRALIA'S MONASH University and Apollo Hospitals have tied up to train AI algorithms to identify and diagnose diseases such as cancer, heart disease and diabetes.

Under the deal, Monash University will gain access to the Apollo's extensive, de-identified patient data from over 200 million patient interactions. The faculty of information technology at Monash University will also conduct educational sessions for Apollo's healthcare staff, and the students at the university will engage with Apollo Hospitals in real-life practical settings to conduct their projects.

"This opportunity provides both Apollo Hospitals and Monash to implement first ever digital health projects in Australia by leveraging the extensive learnings at Apollo Hospitals. We are particularly keen to locally-test and cross-validate the clinical AI work being done by the team at Apollo Hospitals," said Dr. Bala, digital health lead (faculty of IT), Monash University.
