Green hydrogen: India Inc's next big thing

Even as policies and supply chain take shape, conglomerates and RE companies are investing heavily in this new fuel

SHREYAJI & SHINE JACOB
New Delhi/Chennai, 25 Aug-22

GREEN SIGNALS

- RIL, as part of its ₹75,000 crore green investment push, will set up electrolyser for manufacturing green hydrogen. Aim - 1-1.1 = 1 kg hydrogen at $1 in a decade
- Adani Petrochemicals to combine business with a variety of green fuel offerings
- Adani New Industries Ltd to

- invest $50 billion along with TotalEnergies in building a green hydrogen ecosystem
- ACME to invest $1.5 billion in Tamil Nadu, Karnataka and Oman over the next 7 years for green hydrogen production
- L&T commissioned its first green hydrogen manufacturing unit to produce 45 kg daily

A central guiding policy on this fuel is on the drawing board with unique incentives and a regulated supply chain is yet to emerge. But marquee names in India Inc as well as renewable energy (RE) companies have already bet big bucks in green hydrogen manufacturing.

Most major industrial houses are doing so as part of their decarbonisation drive. Leading this pack is Reliance Industries Limited (RIL), which, sources said, plans to utilise the green hydrogen it produces for in-house consumption initially, not retail sales. This is in line with its ₹75,000 crore green energy push announced in 2020.

"There is immense demand in the various arms of the conglomerate for green hydrogen so that priority would be to meet that. The production plan is fairly large scale, enough to bring the cost down. The company is looking to utilise global technology to reduce manufacturing costs," said a source privy to the matter.

In October 2021, RIL joined hands with Danish company Stiesdal A/S to develop and manufacture hydrogen electrolyser.

On almost similar lines, state-owned oil marketing company Indian Oil Corporation aims to replace at least a tenth of its current fossil-fuel-based hydrogen at its refineries with carbon-free green hydrogen.

In fact, most companies plan to consider captive use first. The Hinduja group, which launched its renewable energy business in 2016, is looking to expand in green hydrogen manufacturing for this purpose. Hinduja (USA), Hinduja Renewables, told Business Standard, that there is a large in-house requirement across segments, from transport to fertiliser, steel, and even fuel blending.

"We want to leverage the group's presence in the supply chain across sectors. Transport would be one major sector. While still in initial stages, we are in discussion with foreign companies to partner for technology tie-ups," he said.

Commercial vehicle maker Ashok Leyland, part of the Hinduja group, plans to include multiple fuels in its portfolio. "We are working on multiple alternative fuels such as compressed natural gas/liquefied natural gas, methanol, and hydrogen with various key partners and look forward to having a complete portfolio of commercial vehicles in the alternative fuel area in the next two-three years," N Saravanan, chief technology officer, said in this paper recently.

Hinduja Renewables, which already has a 360 Mw of solar power capacity, is planning to combine the green energy synergy with hydrogen manufacturing. "These are initial plans but there is definitely an emerging supply synergy with group companies such as Ashok Leyland, Hinduja Agro, steel manufacturing and even fuel blending through our group company Gulf Oil," Pandey said.

But there are others that are looking to cash on this growing market. Leading the pack is Adani Enterprises Limited, which has launched a separate petrochemical company and a new energy company with the core focus on green fuels. Adani Petrochemicals plans to offer a variety of green fuels. It utilises its supply chains and RE units for production and transport.

The company has a four-pronged plan to manufacture Green Hydrogen, Green Methanol, Green Ammonia and Green Fertiliser, said senior executives. For each fuel, the company plans to reach out to different sets of buyers. It will also participate in Central government tenders for green hydrogen and fertilisers, said sources.

Adani has partnered with French major TotalEnergies to create "the world's largest green hydrogen ecosystem". In this strategic alliance, TotalEnergies will acquire 25 per cent in Adani New Industries Ltd (ANIL) from Adani Enterprises Ltd (AEL), a recent company statement said. ANIL is looking to invest close to $50 billion over the next 10 years in green hydrogen and allied ecosystems.

Among the manufacturing majors, L&T last week commissioned a green hydrogen plant at its A M Naik Heavy Engineering Complex in Hazira, Gujarat on August 20. Currently in the pilot stage, the hydrogen would be utilised in-house by blending with natural gas in the manufacturing process, a company said.

Gurugram-based ACME Group has said it is planning to invest about $1.5 trillion in green hydrogen and ammonia for its upcoming units in Tamil Nadu, Karnataka and Oman. The RE company is also looking for foreign equity partners and offtake tie-ups for these projects.

"Over the next seven years, we will be investing $1.5 trillion on three projects. We expect phase 1 of the Tamil Nadu unit to be ready by 2024," Sandeep Kashyap, chief operating officer, ACME Group, said.

Another renewable energy major RE New Power has recently signed a preliminary agreement with the Egyptian government to invest $8 billion to produce green hydrogen in the country. Despite this bullishness, prices will be competitive only with an assured market. "Offtake would need government support. Blending targets, visibility gap funding, and demand aggregation from key sectors can help bring the price down," Pandey said.

One Nation, One Fertiliser: Uniform or blurred branding?

SANJEEV MUKHERJEE
New Delhi, 25 August

The Union Ministry of Chemicals and Fertilisers on Wednesday issued an order directing all manufacturers to sell their products under a uniform brand name.

"Bharat", What does the order entail for fertiliser companies and how does it differ from branding of products practised so far? Here are the answers:

What is the order all about? The government has rolled out a concept of "One Nation One Fertiliser" under which all fertiliser bags, irrespective of their contents or the company that manufactures them, will carry a uniform brand name called "Bharat". The brand name will be tagged with the name of the scheme under which the government grants subsidy to the fertiliser manufacturers.

Thus, a urea bag will bear the name Bharat Urea, or if it is a DAP (di-ammonium phosphate) bag it will be known as Bharat DAP. So far, as with any other products, fertiliser companies market products using their own brands. Being a mass-market product category, fertilisers have colourful brand names like "Kisan", "Paras" that are also easily identifiable.

Does it mean that companies won't be allowed to give any reference of theirs in the package? No, each fertiliser bag is allowed to carry the manufacturer's name. But it will find mention on a small proportion of the bag, as a bulk of it will be covered by the Bharat logo and name of the subsidy scheme.

What is the subsidy scheme called? The central government has always subsidised fertilisers to ensure growers are not financially burdened. It has now named the subsidy scheme Pradhan Mantri Bhariya Januravak Pariyojna (PMBJP). The logo is also part of the One-Nation One Fertiliser concept.

What is the logic behind the change? The government has not officially spelt out a rationale, but according to industry sources it was sought to bring about uniformity since the government subsidises a significant portion of the fertiliser costs. In some products, such as urea, the subsidy goes up to almost 90 per cent. So, it was natural that the products carry a government brand name, they added.

How have fertiliser companies reacted to the move? The big fertiliser players have not publicly responded to the government decision. However, several company officials, who spoke requesting anonymity, say that this is a retrograde step that will push them to lose brand identity built over decades. They also said that if the brand names are jostled out, companies will become mere suppliers of products with little incentive to innovate in a complex space.

Brands act as a key differentiator between two similar products. Companies charge a premium for their brands depending upon the quality, which is a factor, albeit minimal, in the fertiliser segment. Companies also carry out outreach activities such as field-level demonstrations with farmer engagements and their brands are prominently displayed. Such initiatives will now effectively cease.

"The policy would discourage private players from committing to new projects in the coming years. With almost every aspect of fertiliser manufacturing regulated by the government, the sector already has very few private players. Private participation will be impacted badly down the line," Kalyan Goswami, director general, Agro Chem Federation of India, told Business Standard.

Since when will the order come into force? The order will come into effect starting on the occasion of Gandhi Jayanti that falls on October 2. Companies have been given four months to make the transition by disposing of old inventory and starting with labelling new stock.

So far, as with any other products, fertiliser firms market products using their own brands
