Muted sales, dim Diwali for shopkeepers

Hit hard by inflation, cautious spending gets trendy this festival season

SARTHAK CHOUDHURY
New Delhi, 23 October

Though Delhi has been witnessing mammoth traffic snarls in the run-up to Diwali, and many believe that they are due to people going all out to shop for the festive season, shopkeepers say that the crowds have not translated into sizeable footfalls this year. They feel that the loss in sales is due to inflation and the post-Covid economic scenario.

Sixty-year-old Mohammad Sijad, a shop owner in Meena Bazaar, opposite the Jama Masjid in Delhi, says that the rising cost of consumables and other goods has made it difficult for people to splurge during the festival season. "Sales have been muted. People are being cautious about spending as they have seen how Covid can affect their lives. The rising prices have added to our misery," he says.

Manzal Imam, who runs a shop nearby, agrees. "This month has two festivals — Dussehra and Diwali. Most people bought everything when they went out to shop earlier this month. Besides, the products we sell mostly cater to low-income groups. People earning around ₹15,000-20,000 per month cannot afford to go on a shopping spree twice in the same month," he says.

Surveys show that Covid-19 has widened the gap between the rich and the poor. Consumer-goods makers are reporting robust demand for items priced nearly ₹2,000, while industry data on sales of budget phones priced below ₹100 and motorcycles, an indicator of rural demand, are showing a weaker trend. Again, a survey by LocalCircles, an online community of citizens, said that one in three households planned to spend over ₹10,000 this festival season.

And yet, shopkeepers have a different story to tell. Bablu, who owns a shop in Delhi's Janpath Market, says that till 2019 crowds were so large during the festival season that they had to request the police to block the entry to the marketplace. "Earlier, we didn't have time to breathe. People used to throng the markets at this time. But this time, other than the occasional tourist, we have hardly had any customers. Inflation has eaten into their pockets," he says.

A similar script seems to be playing out in other cities as well. Mayank Keswani, a shop owner in Lucknow's Hazratganj market, says that the pandemic changed the way people shop and spend their money. "Sales are down from the previous years. Though it's good to see people coming out to celebrate Diwali after two years, the sentiment has changed. People prefer shopping online now."

For some though, the season has brought in a sense of optimism. Pal Singh, the owner of a clothes store near Red Fort in Delhi, says that even though sales are less than what it was before the pandemic, the numbers have improved from last year. "The past few years have been difficult. First, the renovation (redevelopment project at Chandni Chowk) here disturbed tourists. Then, Covid struck and everything went haywire. Now, with the festival season, we are seeing 50 per cent more sales compared to last year, although we barely saw any sales in 2021. People shifting to online portals have also hurt our sales," says Singh.

Puneet Goel, who runs a light shop on the same street, adds that the festival rush and upcoming wedding season have improved prospects for his business. "We have a positive outlook and expect our business to grow by 20 per cent. People are coming out to shop and buy lights for the first time in three years. They'll do the same during the wedding season. They want to make up for lost time," Goel says.

Balwinder Singh, another shopkeeper, is starting at the possibility of running into losses for the third consecutive year. Reminiscing about pre-Covid days, he says, "People don't have money to spare. Our sales are down by nearly 90 per cent. Our main customer base used to be either the low-income groups or college kids with limited money to spend. Now, the college kids have moved on and the low-income groups are saving up, fearing another lockdown."

He adds: "I have been running my shop for the past 22 years. Back then, I used to complain that I hardly got to spend any time with my family. Now, because business is so bad, I get to spend a lot of time with them. But I miss the other family I didn't realise I had — of customers."

Delhi stares at another smog trial

No fear of ban or steep penalties, as sale and purchase of firecrackers continue

NITIN KUMAR
New Delhi, 23 October

A restriction-free Diwali after two years of the pandemic has buoyed marketplaces and people eager to return to old-fashioned celebrations. As markets across the country anticipate packed last-minute crowds, the firecracker industry hopes to bounce back, and several retail sectors expect a sales booster this year, in the national capital it's a case of "the more things change, the more they remain the same".

The cloud of severe air pollution is looming again in Delhi and the National Capital Region (NCR).

Ahead of Diwali, the air quality index of Delhi was recorded at 247, in the "poor" category, on Sunday. According to the Central Pollution Control Board (CPCB) data, the air quality is likely to remain in the lower end of "very poor" on Monday and "very poor" category on Tuesday.

The Supreme Court has given a blanket ban on the sale and bursting of all firecrackers in the Union Territory, and the Aam Aadmi Party (AAP)-led Delhi government has announced strict fines. Bursting firecrackers on Diwali can attract a jail term of up to six months and a fine of ₹200 in Delhi. The production, storage and sale of crackers in Delhi is also punishable with a fine of up to ₹5,000 and three years in jail under Section 9B of the Explosives Act.

Delhi Environment Minister

Gopal Rai said earlier this week that 408 teams had been formed to ensure effective implementation of the ban. So far, about 13,000 kg of crackers have been seized.

Black market sales abound

Business Standard visited wholesale markets to evaluate the impact of the ban. In the central areas of Sadar Bazar and Chandni Chowk markets, there are shops equipped with green crackers (which are also banned in Delhi). In the backalleys, touts are heard luring customers with the promise of "real crackers".

"Batao kya chahiye, sutli bomb hai, chahiye?" (What do you want? Would you like sutli firecracker?), calls out a teenage boy.

A cracker seller near Jama Masjid says, "Traders have brought the material so they will sell it, no matter what. There is still a huge demand." He adds that even in a wholesale market, small retailers have a lot of inventory. Traders and retailers are expecting bumper sales this Diwali, after a lull of two years of lockdown and muted celebrations.

The difficulty in differentiating between a green and a conventional cracker has made it hard for the authorities to nab sellers. A policeman doing the rounds in South West Delhi's Munirka says that the packaging mentions green crackers even when they are not. "There is no way to ascertain if it is actually green," he adds.

Across Delhi, from public parks to roads, firecrackers were already bursting in several places on Sunday.

In neighbouring Haryana, manufacture, sale and bursting of green firecrackers is permitted while there is no clear directive in Noida, Uttar Pradesh, yet. Firecrackers brought into Delhi from adjoining parts of the NCR aren't uncommon. In the AAP-ruled Punjab, the government has given a two-hour window to burn crackers on Diwali.

Last year in Delhi, between September 28 and November 4, 210 cases were registered and 143 people were held for bursting crackers. Around 19,700 kg of firecrackers were seized and 138 people were also held for selling and supplying them.

How green can NCR's Diwali be?

Green firecrackers were designed to cause less harm to the environment, and reduce health risks for humans. Unlike traditional firecrackers, they do not use harmful chemicals such as aluminium, barium, potassium nitrate or carbon dioxide. But environment experts feel availability of green crackers in Delhi will have little impact on the city's pollution levels because of no restriction in the adjoining states. Suman Mor, chairperson, Department of Environment Studies, Punjab University, says: "Pollution in Punjab and Haryana will impact Delhi. A complete ban on crackers is the only solution ahead."

The Supreme Court on October 14 refused to grant an urgent listing of a plea praying for a nationwide ban on firecrackers. Chief Justice of India U U Lalit, while hearing the plea remarked that an injunction on firecrackers this close to Diwali would lead to severe losses as many people would have already invested in the business.

According to reports, the firecracker industry is estimated to have an annual turnover of over ₹4,800 crore from 2,200 big and small factories in India that employ over five lakh people in manufacturing units directly and another four lakh indirectly.

Another trouble brewing for the NCR is the increase in stubble burning cases coinciding with the Diwali week. According to the Indian Agricultural Research Institute's real-time monitoring of paddy residue burning events, 5,005 fire counts were recorded in six paddy-growing states — Punjab, Haryana, Uttar Pradesh, Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh and Delhi — from September 15 to October 22, as against 7,790 cases recorded during the same period last year.
