Chips of smaller nodes are faster and more profitable, but their factories can cost as much as a nuclear power plant

New Delhi, 26 August

ompanies that have applied for India's financial incentive scheme to set up facilities to manufacture chips - integrated circuits imprinted on silicon wafers — are divided on the way forward. The bone of contention is the size of the nodes. Everyone knows small is the future of chip making. But there are deep schisms over the right size to start with, and how one should progress to smaller, more powerful, more sophisticated, and eventually more profitable chips.

The Vedanta-Foxconn joint venture has said it would begin production with 28 nano metre (nm) chips, focusing on the consumer electronics and mobile devices market. It will invest $7 billion and earmark 80 per cent of its output for domestic consumption. Singaporebased IGSS Ventures, too, says it will concentrate, at least initially, on chips of 28 nm to 65 nm for which it already has the

"It is the right way to begin. The be around $1.14 billion in India, out of the global $8 billion market, by 2025 and has a lifecycle of five to seven years," says Satva Gupta, former president of the Indian Electronics and Semiconductors Association (IESA). Gupta's study shows foundry business in 2025 will still be from chips of 18 nm and above.

Foundries are factories that make panies such as Qualcomm. The other the value share of the analogue chips. kind of chip making is by companies ufacturers that both design as well as manufacture — and sell directly to their clients. Samsung is the third kind, which does both: make for itself as well as for others. Intel is now setting up a foundry business as well.

ISMC, a consortium led by Mumbaibased Next Orbit, which has signed a definitive agreement with Israel-based Tower Corporation for technology and which has now been acquired by Intel, has a different view. "The way to start is to make analogue chips to begin with and then move to digital and then memory, which is called the crawl-walk-run strategy. As digital and memory are more capital-intensive and involve complex technology, the best way is to start with analogue, create a semiconductor infrastructure and supply chain through analogue, and then move up," says Ajay Jalan, founder, Next

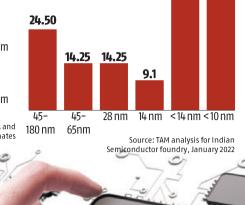

The lower the nano metre of a digital chip, the more its cutting edge, meaning more processing power while using less electricity and more functionalities. Small-node chips therefore command foundry market for 28 nm chips would higher price tags and yield bigger profit margins. Analogue chips range from 45 nm to 230 nm. India's semiconductor market — chip is the general term for semiconductor component products is expected to touch $64 billion by 2026 according to IESA, with digital chips of that 38 per cent of the value of the 22 nm or less commanding an overwhelming $40 billion, or more than 60 per cent, of the total market, says ISMC. The share of chips above 22 nm. it says, will chips for third party chip design comfall to a mere 20 per cent, pretty close to

The Indian government's $10 billion such as Intel, which are integrated man-incentive scheme for building the semiconductor industry has pegged the financial subsidy for the project cost of the fab plant based on the chip size. Eligible players would get only 30 per cent if they manufacture chips above 45nm, 40 per cent for above 28 nm, and 50 per cent for chips of 28 nm or less.

ISMC initially plans to go with more advanced analogue chips of 65 nm and then move down to 45 nm. (Currently 180 nm analogue chips are the most pop-needed for a 28 nm plant. Like many in the industry Jalan does not see a future in digital 28 nm chips, as the Indian plants will take two to four years to get off the ground. By that time, in the fast changing world of chip making, the global market would have shifted to 22 nm, which is expected to have a lifecycle of four to seven years, followed by the 14 nm chip.

Even Gupta's estimates show that as much as 50 per cent of the foundry value of sale in India would be accounted for by chips with nodes of 14 nm and below by 2025. Demand for lower node chips is expected to explode in the country with the imminent launch of 5G telecom services, new use cases emerging from the auto industry as it shifts from internal combustion engines to electric, the growth of Internet of Things, and dig-corporate sectors. So, why are the applicants not choosing to manufacture chips of lower nodes? One big challenge is the technology. The few global companies italization in the government and that have the technology, such as TSMC, Samsung, and Intel, are unlikely to transfer it in the 14 nm and less segment, at least for a while, as they have invested billions of dollars to develop it and would want to recover

The second challenge is the investment required. According to Boston Consulting Group, a state-of-the-art fab plant for small nodes can cost upwards of $15 billion, which is about as much as the cost of a nuclear power plant.

The third is that India is not a focus market for global chip makers for setting up small-node chip fab units. Intel, for instance, has committed investments worth $100 billion to build plants in the United States and Germany, Samsung $205 billion in three years in its existing locations, and TSMC $100 billion to boost its output in Taiwan and the US.

House panel grills Twitter officials over data security

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA New Delhi, 26 August

A parliamentary panel Friday questioned top Twitter officials over a whistle-blower's revelations on its India operations, and gave them a dressing-down as their replies on issue of data security and privacy were "not satisfactory", sources said.

Top Twitter executives, including Senior Director (Public Policy) Samiran Gupta, Director (Public Policy) Shagufta Kamran deposed before the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Information and Technology chaired by senior Congress leader Shashi Tharoor.

The panel questioned them about the reports on former head of Twitter (security) Peiter Zatko's allegations the microblogging site knowingly allowed the Indian government to place its "agents" on the company payroll where they Twitter officials' had "direct unsupervised replies on issue of access to the company's data security and systems and user data". The privacy were "not Twitter officials denied any satisfactory", such thing having hap- sources said pened and refused there was any data security breach in India, sources in the panel said.

The members also questioned the social media giant's officials if their data security policies is in synch with local policies and with the single global privacy policy. They also asked how does the microblogging site handles conflicts in national privacy policies of different countries,

United Spirits Ltd. has paused whiskey sales in a number of states yet to budge on price caps despite rising inflation. The move to stop sales rather than see margins continue to erode is a risky bet, analysts at Mumbai-based Dolat Capital wrote last month, that could complicate the firm's pivot to premium September.
