Firms turn to social media to vet background checks for top brass

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
Mumbai, November 4

WITH THE #METOO movement gaining momentum across the country, experts feel companies need to widen background screening, including social media checks, while hiring prospective candidates, they said.

Posts on social media platforms can indicate the behaviour and personality of a prospective candidate, they said. "Social media has a large role to play in today's hiring. Posts on social platforms can indicate the behaviour and personality of a prospective candidate. Not just the angry rants, but also who they follow, what they read, and where they vacation, can say a lot of things about a candidate," Team Lease Services senior vice-president Neeti Sharma said.

According to her, other means that companies can use to avoid hiring such 'bad' candidates is doing a mapping or even meet them upfront. For instance, globally, many companies map and meet senior or mid-level candidates socially to identify their personality traits.

"Social tests conducted by some companies globally go beyond the background verification with the HR or their reporting managers."

"Receptionists, cab drivers, security guards, and women colleagues among others are also contacted to informally verify the potential candidate," she adds. Most multinationals, large corporates and publicly traded companies in the country are aware of the consequences of such incidents and make it a priority for them.

"However, many companies from the SME/MSME and informal segments need to focus on prevention of sexual harassment at workplace as well as make their employees aware of the POSH (prevention of sexual harassment) Act."

"Another segment that needs to build this in right earnest are the startups," she said.

"The startups in the beginning have a few hands but when they grow up it will become imperative for them to start paying attention to ensure safety and security of its female employees at the workplace," she says.

Echoing a similar view, Rahul Belwalkar, CEO of Secur Credentials, which is into employee background checks, says besides reports from the previous workplaces, a complete background check includes checking the targets address, educational qualifications, social media backgrounds, credit history, court and criminal records, apart from making him/her undergo a psychometric and drug tests.

"These are the industry best practices which help identify the correct fit for companies and weed out the undesirables."

"While the types of checks conducted and the processes for the same advance with social and technological changes, the

Globally, many companies map and meet senior or mid-level candidates socially to identify their personality traits underlying philosophy for conducting background checks is to try to get as much information as possible about a candidate to take an informed hiring decision," he explains.

According to Ketan Kapoor, the co-founder and chief executive of Metti, which is into online assessment of senior professionals, opined that it's crucial that senior level employees are made to go through stringent background checks.

"Manager behaviour has been identified as the biggest source of workplace stress, which is the leading cause of poor workplace performance, absenteeism, low employee engagement and high attrition."

"A thorough background check can reveal information regarding how the manager is being perceived in their previous workplaces," he says.

He also underlines the need for a police record check to know if there is any prior or ongoing legal complaints against the individual being probed.

REPUBLICANS HAVE A huge advantage as they seek to hold or expand their 51-49 Senate majority, with the battle for control running mostly through states that President Donald Trump won in 2016.

Out of the 35 Senate contests taking place on Tuesday, 10 involve Democratic incumbents seeking re-election in states that Trump won, often handily. He's spending much of the final week before the election travelling to those states in the hope that it will nudge his supporters to the polls. Meanwhile, Democratic hopes of taking the Senate hinge on nearly all of their incumbents winning — a difficult task — and on flipping seats in a few states that lean Republican, most notably Arizona, Tennessee and Texas.

Democratic senator Joe Donnelly is trying to fend off Republican businessman Mike Braun in a state that Trump won by 19 percentage points. Donnelly is Indiana's lone Democrat elected statewide and has sought to align himself with Trump on the hot-button issue of expanding the border wall with Mexico. He has portrayed himself as a moderate who works with both parties to pass legislation. "I go against my party all the time," he said recently.
