EU locked in 'long battle' against Chinese fraud

World's first ambassador Rushdie's Ouichotte on to technology industry

CASPER KLYNGE, A career diplomat from Denmark, has worked in some of the world's most turbulent places. He once spent 18 months embroiled in reconstruction efforts in Afghanistan, For two years, he led a crisis management mission in Kosovo.

We klynge, 46, says his

Yet Klynge, 46, says his toughest foreign posting may be the one he has now: as the world's first foreign ambassador to the technology world's first...sador to the techniquestry.

In 2017, Denmark became the first nation to formally create a diplomatic post to represent its interests before companies such as Facebook and
-to After Denmark deter

sate suppontant post or typer-sent its interests before com-panies such as Facebook and Google. After Denmark deter-mined that tech behemoths now have as much power as many governments – if not more — Klynge was sent to Sil-icon Valley.

"What has the biggest impact on daily society? A country insouthern Europe, or in Southeast Asia, or Latin America, orwould it be the big technology platforms?" Klynge sald in an interview last month at a cafe in central Copenhagen during an annual meeting of Denmark's diplomatic corpo-rations. "Our values, our insti-tutions, democracy, human rights, in my view, are being challenged right now because of the emergence of new tech-nologies." He added, "These companies have moved from being companies with com-mercial interests to actually becoming de facto foreign pol-icy actors."

But after two years in the ich Khynge is under no fills.

icy actors."

But after two years in the Job, Klynge is under no illusions of where Denmark's concerns figure in the minds of Silicon Valley executives. Denmark's population of 5.8 million is smaller than that of the San Francisco Bay Area, Fewer than 0.3% of Tacebook's 2.4 billion global users live in the Scandinavian country.

Casper Klynge is Denmark's ambassador to the tech industry

Silicon Valley companies and their leaders have given Klynge a mixed reception. He has never met with Mark Zuckerberg of Facebook or Sundar Pichai of Google or Timothy D. Cook of Apple. Danish officials said it was like dealing with an opaque new world superpower.

officials said it was like dealing with an opaque new world superpower.

"We've been too naïve too now too too long about the tech revolution," said Jeppe Kofod, Denmark's minister for foreign affairs. So Rlynge's position is part of an effort 'to make sure that democratic governments et the boundaries for the tech industry and not the otherway around," Kofod said.

Denmark is emblematic of the many small countries that are grappling with technology's effects on their societies and are frustrated by an inability to meet with, let alone influence, the companies causing that disruption.

Danish officials have been particularly concerned byhow technological change is causing challenges that have afflicted other Western democracies: the spread of false and politically divisive content on social media, questions about privacy and data-hungry services, cybersecurity and the low taxes the companies pay outside the US.

Andrew Gooper, a political-science professor at the University of Waterloo who studies diplomacy, said smaller countries had long needed novel ways to get attention from nations with more power. The Maldives, for instance, has hosted underwater cabinet meetings to raise awareness about climate change, while Sweden created an embassyin the virtual-world video game Second Life. What's surprising, Cooper said, is the extent to which Denmark is applying the strategy to private companies. "Denmark has to play different game," he said.

But the obstacles Klyngehas faced in Silicon Valleyhave been humbling. He said it had taken nine months to sit down with a senior executive at one of the biggest tech companies, which he declined to name. He arrived expecting a frank conversation on issues agreed on beforehand, including taxes, cybersecurity and internet misniformation—only to be offered a headquarters tour, he said.

When the executive arrived later, he began a brief rant against European regulations of the tech industry, before saying he did not have time for the meeting, Klynge said. Then the executive left.

As Klynge was exiting the building, the executive called his mobile phone to ask him to wait. Klynge thought there had been a change of heart.

Not so. "When I got back to the conference room he gave me a goody bag with a T-shirt and cap of the particular company," he said. He said Danish officials "laughed about this incident a lot afterward, but it says a lot about the mind-set of some of the companies in Sil-says a lotabout the mind-set of some of the companies in Silicon Valley."

Some tech companies sade they were beginning to better understand Klynge's job.

Brad Smith, president of Microsoft, said he spoke regularly with Klynge, whose appointment he said gave Denmark'outsized influence."

ing for individual purchases of new energy vehicles starting June 26 to encourage carmakers to focus on product innovation.

While electric vehicles account for just a few percent of the car market, automakers are betting on the segment for future growth.

Place: Kolketa Date: 03.09.2019

Slowing demand for gas guzzlers has plunged automobile markets worldwide into a decline, led by a historic drop in China. For the first seven months of the year, the global electric-car market showed growth of 35%, Bernstein said. The researcher estimates that full-years also will rise by 32% to 2.4 million to 2.9 million units in 2019.

"Unsurprisingly the growth momentum halted in Julyamid subsidycuts," Bernstein analysts said in the report. "Despit in 2H19, we continue to be positive on long-term EV demand."
Tesla led the passenger by market with sales of about 20,000 units in July, followed by BYD Company; the Chinese brand backed by Warren Buffett.
