Crypto's vault of trade secrets

The WazirX controversy is not just about a company but about an industry

SHIVANI SHINDE
Mumbai, 17 August

A few days ago, Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman urged the start-up community and public to deal in cryptocurrency with caution because everything that was floating around was not currency.

In the first week of August, the country's top nine crypto exchange platforms were summoned by the Directorate of Enforcement (ED) in Hyderabad. The exchanges were questioned for money laundering, especially over a number of Indian non-banking financial companies and their fintech partners for predatory lending practices in violation of the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) guidelines and by using tele-callers who misuse personal data and use abusive language to extort high interest rates from the loan takers.

The ED found that large amounts of funds were diverted by the fintech companies to buy crypto assets and then launder them abroad. These companies and the virtual assets are untraceable at the moment, hence the summons to the crypto exchanges.

In a span of two weeks or so a lot has happened, the latest being the ED freezing crypto exchange Vault's assets worth ₹370 crore.

Before Vault, WazirX, which is owned by Binance, was pulled up by the ED and its bank assets worth ₹64.67 crore were frozen. With the ED heat on, Binance disowned the company. And the spat between the founders Changpeng Zhao (CZ) of Binance and Nischal Shetty of WazirX on the ownership of the company will be forever chronicled on Twitter.

On August 9, WazirX came out with a detailed response on the ED issue and stated that it has a no-tolerance policy towards illegal activities.

While the ED investigation is still going on, the fact that WazirX is paying the price

ON THE RADAR

- In August 1st week, ED summoned India's top nine crypto exchange platforms; they were questioned for money laundering, especially over a number of Indian NBFCs and their fintech partners for predatory lending
- The ED found funds were diverted by fintech companies to buy crypto assets and then launder them abroad
- The ED froze crypto exchange Vault's assets worth ₹370 cr, and WazirX's bank assets

worth ₹64.67 cr

- With the ED heat on, WazirX was disowned by Binance, the world's largest crypto exchange and users are moving away from the platform
- Checks with crypto investors as well as exchanges show that despite the ED crackdown investment sentiment among investors has not been impacted
- Industry players are also saying that users are moving to decentralised wallets so that they have control of their investments

for its association with Binance is clear.

As for Binance, getting embroiled with the ED is much more worrisome than washing its hands off WazirX. A little background here: Binance, the world's largest crypto exchange, is undergoing a restructuring that started last year. The restructuring was being done due to regulatory concerns over the firm's lack of systemic transparency.

According to a Finextra report, CZ in an interview to the South China Morning Post had said that the company will rebuild itself into a centralised business. The Finextra report said that according to a notice published by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) in August 2021, Binance has previously refused to declare where certain operations are held, who its key stakeholders are, and the legal and regulatory status of its products. As it stands, Binance operates through a sprawling network of offices around the world and has no "official" headquarters.

Along with regulators in Japan, Hong Kong and Italy, the FCA has prohibited Binance's UK entity from operating in the country.

As a part of the restructuring, Binance had appointed Greg Monahan, a former US treasury criminal investigator, the user's real identity or the scale of transactions. Thus, putting the onus of deducting TDS on the individual, which is nearly impossible."

The email goes on to explain the issue. Individual users may move away to international exchanges, but when it comes to exchanging crypto to Indian rupees they will face issues. It is mandatory for the buyer (whether a resident of India or not) to deduct 1 per cent (5 per cent in some cases) of the amount paid to the Indian seller for transactions more than ₹10,000.

In a notice dated June 22, the Central Board of Direct Taxes mandates a person who is responsible for paying any resident any sum by way of consideration for transfer of crypto to deduct an amount equal to 1 per cent of such sum as income tax thereon. The tax deduction is required to be made when the sum is credited to the account of the resident or at the time of payment, whichever is earlier.

"WazirX has a framework for complying with the TDS as per the government notification. We request the users not to panic and take the right decision," the management's email said.

Industry players are also saying that users are moving to decentralised wallets so that they have control of their investments. "Users can do that, but will they pay the 1 per cent TDS to the government? For that they will have to go through the exchanges," said a founder of the start-up Web3.

It is perhaps time for the government to come out with clear rules on crypto. Though the RBI has always stated that crypto is not a legal currency to transact, the fact is that there are thousands of people who want to trade in them.

The Indian start-up ecosystem has seen a good amount of investments in the sector. According to the Tracxn database, since 2021 there has been an investment of $640 million. For 2021, the figure was $441 million across 15 rounds. Last year, two crypto exchanges in India became unicorns.

Measuring jawlines: How new facial recognition system works at airports

SAI MANISH
New Delhi, 17 August

The facial recognition technology deployed by the Delhi police to track perpetrators of the 2020 riots and the April 2022 violence at Jahangirpuri in Delhi is all set to be deployed at the Delhi and Bengaluru airports.

Instead of Delhi police headquarters, the action will shift to server rooms at these airports, which will grant access to passengers without flashing their identity cards at multiple entry points. Unlike the police, which forced alleged perpetrators to recreate their poses caught on CCTV cameras, the airport facial recognition systems would use superior technology that identifies the passenger in less than a second by matching physical attributes like their jawline, shape of the eyes and nose, size of the chin, among others, to grant "seamless" access to airports.

The system

Envisioned as DigiYatra in 2018, the system involves the installation of biometric face recognition systems at various airports across India.

The passenger has to download the DigiYatra application, create a profile by entering basic details and uploading their identity documents. Anyone using this for the first time will have to register themselves at the airport, following which their profile and biometric details will be added to the airport's database.

For every journey thereafter, the passenger will have to scan their boarding pass for verifying their DigiYatra identity. From here, all entry points, except manual frisking at security checks before boarding, will be through face recognition that will scan a face and open gates automatically.

Who is behind it?

Incorporated in 2018, the DigiYatra Foundation (DYF) serves as the nodal agency for the system's implementation. It is not a body under the Ministry of Civil Aviation. It was incorporated as a not-for-profit company to develop what is called the DigiYatra Central Ecosystem — an all encompassing term for the entire face recognition infrastructure being rolled out across various airports.

The Airports Authority of India (AAI) owns 24 per cent of the shares in DYF. The rest is held by special purpose vehicles operating the Bengaluru, Delhi, Mumbai, Hyderabad, and Cochin airports. While GMR operates the Delhi and Hyderabad airports, Mumbai, Bengaluru and Cochin are operated by Adani, Fairfax, and the Kerala state government, respectively.

What kind of data can DYF collect?

The DYF, consisting of various private operators, can collect vast amounts of personal and business data from passengers using its platform. According to its privacy statement, DYF can collect and share data like identity card number, employment history, professional qualifications, job positions, the images or videos generated while using the platform, telephone number, name and other biometric data with third parties. This data can be shared with "entities within DYF, agents in relation to their programs including marketing and sales."

DYF does not guarantee that it will not access unsolicited information from passengers like information contained in their personal emails and public posts. However, it has to abide by rules that mandate that passenger data cannot be stored in airport servers or DYF's database 24 hours after the culmination of a person's travel.

Passengers will have to download the DigiYatra app, create a profile, and register at an airport when using the system for the first time

The companies contracted Bengaluru airport's facial recognition system has been installed by a Portuguese company named Vision Box. The contract was signed in 2018 in Lisbon in a ceremony attended by top BIAL officials and even the Portuguese PM Antonio Costa. Meanwhile, Japan's NEC Corporation has bagged contracts for other airports including Vijayawada, Varanasi, Kolkata and Pune. These airports are expected to make facial recognition systems fully operational later this year.

3-second wait time

The Ministry of Civil Aviation has claimed that each passenger would need less than three seconds at every touch point, except the physical security check before boarding. At the moment, there are at least four touch points, except the physical frisking bay, where passengers have to show either their boarding pass or their identities or both.

Apprehensions of mass surveillance

Organisations like the Internet Freedom Foundation and many other activists have slammed the DigiYatra project stating that the system could be misused in a country where there is no data protection or privacy laws.
