A cash cliff spells trouble for US unemployed, and everyone else

JONNELLE MARTE & ANN SAPHIR June 29

JUDITH RAMIREZ IS bracing for July.

That's when the hotel housekeeper and her electrician husband - who have both been out of work for three months - expect their combined unemployment benefits to drop by more than half...

It's a cash cliff millions of Americans face this summer as the emergency benefits - which lifted US consumer incomes by a record 10.8% in April - expire.

The $600 supplement Congress added to weekly unemployment benefits is due to expire July 31.

Without new support, recipients face a substantial loss of income - particularly devastating for those like the Ramirez family who worked in hard-hit sectors like hospitality...

The combined cash aid provided $3 in support for every $1 in lost income in April, Oxford Economics' Gregory Daco estimated.

forbearance on her mortgage but is worried about what will happen when the government programs run out.

Benefits lifted spending

As the novel coronavirus pandemic exploded in March and local authorities shut down large parts of the US economy, the Trump administration and Congress softened the blow by moving quickly to roll out a patchwork of emergency aid.

The centerpiece: stimulus checks for most households and more generous unemployment benefits for tens of millions of newly jobless Americans.

The combined cash aid provided $3 in support for every $1 in lost income in April, Oxford Economics' Gregory Daco estimated.

Indeed about two-thirds people eligible for unemployment benefits can collect more in benefits than they earned while working, researchers from the University of Chicago found.

For low-wage workers like Ramirez, the help was particularly critical. Households across the board slashed spending as coronavirus-related restrictions began in March.

Outlays by low-income households are now only about 30% below pre-crisis levels, versus minus 13% for high-income households.

When the extra benefits run out, jobless benefits will revert to their typical pre-pandemic levels, low by design to encourage people to look hard for work.

That may pressure some people short on cash to risk their health to take a low-paying job at a restaurant or delivery company, which may expose them to the virus.

Reserve economist. "That's a very terrible choice for our policymakers to be telling people they need to make," she said.

The drop-off in support is also a problem for the economy as a whole, reducing GDP by 2.5% in the second half of 2020.

Congress may consider at least a partial extension of the benefits, but the uncertainty is making some families cautious about their spending.

"Lower-income households are worried that the pandemic will re-intensify and disrupt their incomes further," said Zandi.

Ramirez, 40, spent a month chasing down her unemployment benefits after she stopped working in late March.

Knowing that the benefits are going to be reduced dramatically and unsure of when they'll get back to work, Ramirez and her husband are living frugally.

Samsung's billionaire heir scores public win in graft probe

SOHEE KIM Seoul, June 29

SAMSUNG HEIR-APPARENT JAY Y. Lee scored a symbolic public victory Friday after a civilian review panel recommended against indicting the billionaire on charges of corruption.

The panel, convened after Lee's lawyers invoked the rarely used system in an effort to undermine prosecutors, voted in favor of halting an indictment, a spokesperson for the supreme prosecutors' office said by phone.

"We respect the decision made by the committee members," Lee's attorneys said in a statement.

"We are thankful that the panel gave an opportunity for Samsung and vice chairman Jay Y. Lee to overcome the current crisis by focusing on business activities."

In most legal systems of the developed world, public prosecutors get to decide which cases to pursue, with judges or juries acting as a check by determining the ultimate verdict.

The country has established an unusual process that allows suspects to call for an independent panel of experts to review prosecutors' investigations.

The highest-stakes case since this novel system was established in 2018 was heard Friday when lawyers for the billionaire scion of Samsung Group tried to convince a panel his prosecution for alleged financial crimes would be unfair.

Attorneys for Lee, de facto leader of Samsung Electronics Co., squared off Friday against government prosecutors before 14 academics, legal experts and civil activists.

Lee, embroiled in an increasingly contentious dispute with Korean prosecutors over allegations of bribery and accounting manipulation, presents the biggest test so far of a civil committee system created to help check prosecutors' powers.

Friday's panel served as a barometer for how the public views the Samsung chief's culpability as well as a test of the legitimacy of prosecutors, whose leader in Korea is appointed by the president.
