Roaring crypto cacophony drowns out rest of Wall Street

BRANDON KOCHKODÍN May 14

WILD STOCK SWINGS, spikes in Treasury yields, startling economic readings? Interesting, sure. But if you reallywant toget people's attention right now, you need to tell them a story about crypto.

And there have been a lot of these Fixes for a market that it.

about crypto.
And there have been a lot of those. Even for a market that's famous for iswalicovatility and gimmicks, the past week's cryptocurrency news set new records for jaw-droppers. It began with Elon Musk's highly anticipated appearance ashost on "Saturaday Night Lies". Dogecoin owners watched hoping that he Dogecther "would further propel the digital currency that had soared this perion less than a penny to 74 cent's before he took the stage. What they got instead was a skit in which he laughed after

It and other action fees on the Ethereum network hit an all-time high, ac-cording to CoinDesk. The rally faded quickly. The cryptocur-rency plunged Wednesdy after the Wall Street Journal reported that Ethereum creator Vitalik Ruteris denoted meet then S.I. Buterin donated more than $1 billion of the coin to a charity that is fighting the spread of Covid-19 in India.

Then that night, Musk struck again. He announced that Tesla Inc. would no longer accept Bitcoin as a form of payment for its cars. In a tweet, Musk said that the carmaker was "concerned about rapidly increasing use of fossil fuels for Bitcoin mining and transactions, especially coal, which has the worst emissions of any fuel." While his tweet left Bitcoin holders wondering what spurred the change—the facts of the coin's energy profile had-n't changed since Tesla announced in Manch that it would accept las payment—the market reacted swiftly. Bitcoin plunged from nearly $57,000 before his flip flop to $46,000 within two hours.

Thursday brought some good news for crypto die-hards. Point 72, the hedge fund run by billionaire New York Mets owner Steve Cohen, was set to make a sizable move into the market.
