Thousands stranded & families separated after Trump H-1B decree

OLIVIA CARVILLE & SHELLY BANJO
New York, June 30

Aerial view of Menlo Park, California

About 375,000 temporary visas and green cardholders will now be banned from entering the US until next year, according to Julia Gelatt, a senior policy analyst with the Migration Policy Institute, a nonpartisan research group

NATASHA BHAT LEARNED in late February that her father-in-law had suddenly died. Bhat, 35, recently recalled how she grabbed a backpack and hustled her US-born 4-year-old son to the San Francisco airport to catch a midnight flight to India, her home country. She didn't anticipate being stuck there indefinitely.

Bhat works at a tech company in Silicon Valley on an H-1B visa, and her documents were due for renewal. So she threw them in the bag, knowing she'd have to get the chore taken care of before flying back to the US in a few weeks. But she said her mid-March appointment at the US consulate in Kolkata was cancelled when it shut down due to Covid-19 concerns. Her return home was delayed further when President Donald Trump signed an executive order last week barring many people on several types of visas, including H-1Bs, from entering the country until 2021.

Trump's executive order is the latest step in his years-long tightening of US immigration policy. The president has argued since taking office the visa programs allow employers to undercut native-born workers on wages, over the objections of companies that say they need highly skilled workers to fill crucial job openings. The latest restrictions, said Greg Siskind, an immigration lawyer in Memphis, "use the pandemic as an excuse to achieve anti-immigration goals the administration has wanted to do for years."

H-1B holders, about three-quarters of whom work in the tech sector, have felt a creeping sense of unease since Trump took office. Still, thousands of them continued to fly back and forth between the U.S. and their home countries, for weddings or funerals—or for work assignments or to get mundane paperwork taken care of. (Some visas require people to leave the country briefly after approval to get their passports stamped.) Many of those who left the U.S. this spring, as Bhat did, found the world as they knew it changed mid-trip.

The objections haven't spared people like Bhat and her husband, who have worked in Silicon Valley for the last nine years, she as a manager for a software firm and he as an engineer at a bank. Her husband flew back to the US in early March for work and has spent the past four months of lockdown alone. That is now working overnight to support her US-based clients, and trying to convince their son Adhrit to eat Indian food like chapati for breakfast over his complaints that he misses his standard Californian breakfast of avocado toast.

The prospect of a wave of people stranded abroad began worrying Siskind several weeks ago when he first caught wind of the planned order. On Twitter, he warned workers on non-immigrant visas not to leave the U.S. He urged those abroad to come back as soon as possible.

on Pakistan Stock Exchange

BLOOMBERG
Islamabad, June 30

PAKISTAN'S PRIME MINISTER Imran Khan blamed Monday's attempted siege of the nation's stock exchange on India, ratcheting up the war of words between the two nuclear-armed neighbours. Khan told lawmakers in parliament that India was "no doubt" involved in the attacks. He didn't give any evidence, and reiterated comments made by foreign minister Shah Mahmood Qureshi on Monday. The raid on the bourse left four security personnel dead. All 4 gunmen were also killed.

India's foreign ministry spokesman rejected the accusation made by Qureshi on Monday, calling them "absurd." India and the US see Pakistan as providing safe haven for terrorist groups and say that the leadership of groups such as Jaish-e-Mohammed and Lashkar-e-Taiba, which carried out the Mumbai attacks in 2008, still live freely in Pakistan. While Pakistan says India is funding militants in the restive Balochistan province.

Balochistan Liberation Army claimed responsibility for the attack at the exchange on Monday, AP reported. The at-

FBI warns of fraudulent coronavirus antibody tests

CHRISTINA MORALES
June 30

THE FBI HAS issued a warning about scammers who advertise fraudulent Covid-19 antibody tests as a way to obtain personal information that can be used for identity theft or medical insurance fraud.

A person using a computer, likely representing a scammer or someone being scammed.

or medical insurance fraud. The fraudulent tests, the authorities say, are just another way for scammers to capitalize on people's fear and uncertainty from the coronavirus pandemic.

Last Wednesday, the Federal Trade Commission warned of scammers pretending to be contact tracers. In early June, the Internal Revenue Service alerted people about fraud surrounding government stimulus coronavirus payments.

—NYT

The warning, issued Friday, is the latest in a series of alerts from the federal government about fraudulent exploitation of the coronavirus pandemic.

Scammers are advertising the fake or unapproved tests — online, through social media or email, or in person or over the phone, the FBI said.

They could claim that the tests were approved by the Food and Drug Administration, as well as advertise free Covid-19 antibody tests or provide incentives for testing.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation recommends that those looking to take an antibody test — which is used to determine whether a person has had the coronavirus — consult a list of tests and testing companies that the Food and Drug Administration has approved.

These tests have been evaluated in a study performed at the National Institutes of Health's cancer institute or by another FDA designated government agency. People should also consult with their primary care physician before taking any Covid-19 antibody test at home, the FBI says. It also warned against sharing personal or health information with anyone who is not a "known and trusted medical professional," as well as checking medical bills for suspicious claims and reporting those claims to health insurance providers.

Among the methods fraudulent marketers use to obtain crucial personal information is calling people and telling them that they're working with the government or that government officials are requiring them to take a Covid-19 antibody test. They sometimes also offer to perform the test for cash.

The goal is to seek personal data, like a person's name, date of birth, Social Security number, Medicare and health insurance information. This can later be used for identity theft
