DIGITAL PERSONAL DATA SAFETY RULES

Platforms may get 72 hours to address user grievances

May have to inform Board immediately in case of breach

JATIN GROVER New Delhi, January 17

THE UPCOMING RULES to comply with the Digital Personal Data Protection (DPDP) Act will likely require platforms to address users' grievances related to their personal data in the 72 hours upon receiving them.

In absence of the same, users will have the right to approach the Data Protection Board to appeal against the non-action of the data fiduciaries and seek remedy, according to draft DPDP rules which have been circulated among the industry groups.

Addressing user grievances promptly by the companies assumes significance given the privacy of users as personal data is being handled by the data fiduciaries. In the notice seeking consent to use personal information, the rules mandate companies to clearly mention the time frame (which should not be more than 72 hours) within which the user grievances will be addressed.

The notice should also include an online link, which can be used by users to appeal to the Data Protection Board in case the companies fail to address user grievances. The companies will have to create a login for users to be able to check all the consent given and make it seamless to withdraw the consent as well.

In case of any breach of personal data, the companies will have to immediately inform the Data Protection Board about
