Two fuels for a heart that is beating as one

BY ANAND KUMAR

The Bifuel Petrol-CNG powertrain as an option for passenger vehicles has been around for almost two decades. It steps into the limelight every time petrol prices shoot up, or occasionally when there is an increase in awareness about the environment.

Depending on the price of petrol, the answer to the eternal "litre det hai" question is enough of a trigger to push buyers into giving Bifuel-CNG variants a try.

After years of retrofitting CNG kits in the after market and their yo-yoing levels of reliability, factory-fitted CNG kits have become the choice among most buyers.

Improved safety, higher reliability levels and the prospect of the engine being tuned to handle the difference in combustion and performance have led to increased preference for factory-fitted Bifuel vehicles. Yet, the buyer has often had to contend with CNG variants being available only in the entry segment or has had to accept compromises in the equipment levels offered compared to their petrol counterparts.

Tata Motors is attempting to change that scenario and has launched the Bifuel versions of its Tigo hatch and Tigor small sedans. While the Tigo gets as many as five trim variants, the Tigor gets three, including dual new joint jobs (optional) on the top trim XZ+ variant.

Design and features

Both the Tigor and the Tigor are good-looking modern cars that have successfully taken on the fierce competition in the B and C entry segments. I observe that the design and overall equipment levels for the exterior of my test male Tigo iCNG continues to be identical to its petrol counterpart. The sharp nose front with the humanity line running from one headlamp to the other like a smile, and the Tata trademark trisarrow design on the bonnet grille give the Tigo an appealing small car profile.

It now also gets projector headlamps and LED DRLs. Both the models — Tigo and Tigor — get new new body paint

Tata Tigo iCNG offers a no-compromise Bifuel solution to buyers looking to stretch their rupee with. The dark grey and beige colour theme for the interior brightens up the cabin, and the fabric seats with contrast stitching and contrast aqua feel good to sit in.

There is the auto steam controls, 7-inch touchscreen infotainment display and set of buttons for fog lamps and door unlock controls. The one addition to this branch is the CNG switch over button. Similarly, while the digital instrument cluster is similar in overall layout in the petrol version, in the Tigo iCNG, there is the CNG fuel gauge as well as the petrol gauge.

There is also the fuel-to-one indicator with an orange fuel-gauge indicator lighting up every time I switch to CNG. The rest of the cabin, including the 7-spoke steering wheel, is similar in design and layout.

Heart of the matter

The iCNG version of both the Tigo and the Tigor feature the 3-cylinder, 1.2-litre Revotron petrol engine with Bifuel injection.

The 1099cc generates 71.4% of peak torque and 90% of peak power in CNG mode. The output is lower in torque generated is also 10% lower than petrol mode. But the calibration seems to have been done with an eye on retaining the experience offered by the regular petrol variant. In the iCNG variant, the engine is mated to the same 5-speed manual gearbox that we have already seen in the Tigo.

The Tigo iCNG doesn't feel like a compromise version of the petrol original's sensation

There is no option of an AMT gearbox. The ICM, in the Tigo iCNG, operates on a completely different engine map compared to the petrol mode. But no discernible difference in overall performance between the petrol and CNG injection cycles. It is not an exact match between the two fuels, and there is a small difference in acceleration times, but the overall experience was similar.

Also, roughly there is a difference of 100 kg in kerb weight between the regular petrol Tigo and the Bifuel iCNG variant.

In handle the 10-12 per cent differential in weight, there have been some tuning changes to the springs and damper character to ensure that the ride and handling both the petrol and CNG modes. The knock-sensor and exhaust have also been tuned for consistent performance across all weather conditions.

Tigo iCNG's ARAI certified mileage is 26.5 km per kg. The petrol only Tigo has a rated fuel efficiency of 20.1 kmpl.

The one problem in the Tigo iCNG variant will be quick and easy access to the spare wheel in the boot.

All the space in the boot is taken up the CNG cylinder (60-litre liquid capacity or 10kg).

So, there is nearly no room for luggage. If the buyer plans to take it out of town for the weekend, a roof-mounted luggage carrier will be needed.

Accessing the spare wheel is possible only by folding down the rear seat and pulling out the smaller 15/80 tyre shed on 1-inch rims. But, it is simple and conventional in the Tigo iCNG, which has 200 litres of usable boot space, despite the presence of the CNG tank.

Bottomline

The Tigo iCNG didn't feel like a detour, compromise version of the petrol original. With the performance and the only quality control and matching the regular petrol version, it is also good to see that this didn't get stripped down and built-to-order.

Features like auto headlamps, sunroofing wipers, rear parking camera, etc. should give the iCNG version the required appeal.

The Tigo iCNG starts at a price of 6.11 lakhs (XZ) and goes up to 7.25 lakh (XZ+ dual tone). Compared to the petrol only versions, these are priced at about 150,000 to 190,000 more.
