course, residential and commercial complexes in a planned way," said Vikas Oberoi, chairman and managing director of Oberoi Realty. "If the MbPT project becomes a reality, it will provide excellent opportunities for real estate companies to build public parks, malls, hotels, schools, hospitals, residential and commercial complexes. It can be an integrated township that can offer everything one needs or aspires for."

One potential hurdle, however, could be the friction between the Bharatiya Janata Party-led central government (MbPT is a central government entity) and the state government (a coalition of Shiv Sena, Congress and the Nationalist Congress Party or NCP). "One can only pray that all the governments focus on the long-term future of Mumbai and insist on increased public amenities like large parks and jogging tracks," said an urban planner, adding, "In the past, greed has not been good for the city."

There are many other policy decisions that Bommai will now have to take.

The new CM, supporters say, has a masterly understanding of Karnataka's river water disputes. Rather than Yediyurappa's uncompromising bluntness, Bommai will likely employ a degree of diplomacy with neighbouring states including Tamil Nadu to try to keep disputes at bay. For the Yediyurappa had a stature in the state, given his work in the party and the organisation. But in the course of his various tenures, he also made many adversaries. Bommai, by contrast, knows the opposition well and has many friends cutting across parties — he is, after all, only a 2008 BJP entrant.

In appointing Bommai, the central BJP has shown rare sensitivity in honouring its of ministers that will please everyone. The expectation is that the new council of ministers will be a judicious mix of those who supported and opposed Yediyurappa.

Elections to the assembly are due in the summer of 2023. Bommai will be working towards those.
