Kozhikode airport is not compatible with safety standards, warning given nine years ago was not considered

The Air India Express plane crash that brought Indians from Dubai under the Vande Bharat Abhiyan at Kozhikode Airport in Kerala once again highlighted the risks associated with air travel. Since the digital flight data recorder and cockpit voice recorder of the crashed aircraft have been found, it will be easy to find out the root cause of the accident, but this preliminary fact also indicates human error at some stage that the aircraft is fixed on the runway Landed about one km from the location. The consequences of such a mistake are not good. It is believed that one reason for this mistake may be rain. However, it should not be overlooked that the aircraft slipped and fell into the ditch causing more damage. He split into two pieces. It is a matter of honor that the pilot had stopped the engine of the aircraft, otherwise the fire could have caused more damage. It is also coming to light that the design of Kozhikode Airport is not compatible with the safety standards of this plane accident which killed 21 people including both pilots. After all, when a security advisory committee constituted by the Ministry of Civil Aviation warned about this airport about nine years ago, why was it not taken care of? Kozhikode Airport is built on a hilly surface. According to security experts, extra care is required when landing aircraft at such airports and should inevitably be done if the weather is bad, as the slightest inadvertence can invite great risks. Was this warning ignored? This is the question that should form part of this plane crash investigation. Keep in mind that this warning was given after the 2010 plane crash at Mangaluru airport. More than 150 people were killed in that accident. Mangaluru airport is also situated on a hill like Kozhikode Airport. Considering this warning, such airports would have either ensured the introduction of extra precaution at the time of landing of aircraft in bad weather and especially in strong rains, or made necessary changes in the design of the airstrip. At least now this work should be done. At the same time, it should also be ensured that there is no hue and cry in learning the lessons needed to make air travel safe.

Delhi must not get complacent

From being among the most-affected regions in the country to battling Covid-19 with relative success, Delhi's journey has gone through many ebbs and flows. Enhanced testing, strict enforcement of restrictions in containment zones, ramping up health infrastructure, prioritising plasma therapy, home isolation, calibrated opening up of activities involving large crowds in closed spaces, and following social distancing protocols to prevent the disease have all helped in bringing down the number of cases and deaths in Delhi. But Covid-19 is still here — and science is still discovering unknown facets of it. It is in that backdrop that recent figures in Delhi present a warning. As this newspaper reported on Tuesday, the city's positivity rate (the number of people who test positive out of 100) has increased to 7.4% last week, after dropping to 5.7% in the week ending July 30. On Sunday, the positivity rate was 8.9% — but the weekly average is a better indicator of the spread of the disease.
