Indians make up over 10 % of US visa applicants

DIVYA A
New Delhi, September 29

THE US EMBASSY has issued over a million non-immigrant visas to Indian travellers so far this year, achieving ahead of time a target it set for this year after opening up weekend slots to clear the pandemic-related backlog.

The millionth visa, the US Embassy said in a statement Thursday, was personally handed over by US Ambassador to India Eric Garcetti to Ranju Singh, who is visiting the US along with her spouse to meet their son, a student.

Non-immigrant visa categories include those for business, travel, student visas and crew visas. Describing it as one of the most robust travel relationships in the world, the US Embassy said over 1.2 million Indians visited the country last year.

Indians now represent over 10 percent of all visa applicants worldwide, including 20 percent of all student visa applicants and 65 percent of all H&L-category (employment) visa applicants, the statement said.

“Our partnership with India is among the most important bilateral relationships, and in fact, one of the most important relationships in the world.

The ties between our people are stronger than ever, and we will continue our record-setting volume of visa work in the coming months,” said Garcetti.

Early next year, the US plans to implement a pilot programme that will allow domestic visa renewal for qualified H&L-category employment visa applicants, the statement said.

The move will significantly benefit Indian tech workers, who will be able to get their visas processed while being in the US, it said. Indians receive more than three quarters of the H-1B visas annually, while the L-1 visa facility is also used by a large chunk of Indian citizens.

Behind shooters’ medal haul, pulse rates, simulation in ‘war room’ back home

MIHIR VASAYDA
New Delhi, September 29

INDIA’S TEENAGE ARMY of shooters continued to strike gold in Hangzhou, with 17-year-old Palak Gulia adding a sixth gold medal to the country’s kitty on Friday. The seed of this golden harvest, after the medal famine at the last two Olympics, were sown in a tiny room in Delhi’s Tughlakabad.

In a cramped space, TV monitors and projectors are used to recreate the look and feel of a competition range and simulate match situations, and hi-tech devices attached to a shooter’s body analyse every muscle twitch, activities of the brain cells, pulse rate and breathing patterns.

“It helps us find our most balanced state. I had a lot of sessions there,” said Palak, the surprise winner of the 10m air pistol gold medal. “That helped a lot,” said 19-year-old Esha Singh, who won four medals in the pistol events, including a silver behind Palak in the 10m air pistol.

The 18 medals India has won so far in shooting at the Asian Games is the most the country has won in a single edition. Four of those came on Friday. Apart from the two women medalists, Aishwary Pratap Singh Tomar, who finished the Games with four medals, staged a sensational comeback to win a silver in the 50m Rifle 3-position, in which India also won the team gold medal.

Playing in front of partisan crowds against a strong Chinese team, some of India’s young shooters looked unflappable under pressure. The reason, they said, was the simulation of such situations at the “war room”.

“We have training camps before every international tournament and even when there are no camps, we go to the range where we do this (analysis) after training,” Palak said. “Our High-

Gold medalist Palak Gulia and silver medalist Esha Singh after the 10m air pistol event in Hangzhou on Friday

Performance Director uses a device he has made to monitor our pulse rate, breathing patterns etc. With that data, we can self-regulate.”

India’s High-Performance Director, Pierre Beauchamp, is a numbers man who has played ice hockey and coached teams. He has worked with footballers and golfers and his philosophies have been adopted by the US Navy Seals and scientists at NASA.

His latest assignment is to help India return among medals at the Olympics in a sport where the country’s athletes have finished on the podium at three back-to-back games between 2004 and 2012.

To achieve this, Beauchamp has embarked on a data-collection mission, the kind of which that’s never seen before in Indian shooting. The “war room” is his laboratory.

India coach Ronak Pandit said the purpose of this exercise, started last year, is to make athletes “used to” the chaos of a final, where Indian shooters have often been guilty of succumbing under pressure.

“There’s no point doing meditation or focus exercises in isolation in a quiet room. The whole idea is to focus on chaos.

You see there’s so much loud music and drama in the final’s hall,” Pandit said.

The name “war room” was kept at the suggestion of the team’s psychologist. “We are fighters basically. When you come to sport, a player knows it’s not going to be easy. You have to fight it out for everything till the end. Our words, our attitude reflect that and hence the psychologist calls it the war room. You go in there to fight,” Pandit said.

The “war room” is located inside the final hall of the Dr Karni Singh Shooting Range in Tughlakabad. Every day after training, each athlete spends up to 30 to 45 minutes inside the room in the presence of coaches, sports scientists and sports psychologists.

A projector beams the image of a shooting range on the wall. On one monitor, the video of a final is played and the shooter then has to play along by going through their entire process.

“It is about placing the athletes in those final situations. Like, if you have just three shots left and you need a 10.8, can you shoot that?” Beauchamp, who joined the team last year in April, said.

Biofeedback devices are attached to shooters’ bodies and they give real-time data on heart rates and breathing patterns. Details such as skin temperature and respiration rates are also monitored. “Accordingly, the psychologist and technical coaches can work with them,” Pandit said.

By gathering all the details, the coaches have been trying to determine the “exact shot-cycle signature” for each shooter – the time when she is most relaxed to pull the trigger.

Pandit said the coaches keep updating the war room, depending on the tournament where the team will be competing. “Before coming here, we had the war room changed to the Asian Games range. Now, we have already started hunting for photos of the range in Jakarta (where the Olympic qualification tournament will be held in January) so that we can prepare the room for that competition,” Pandit said.

Reluctant to buy into a new idea, not all shooters are using the war room so far. But the coaches are expecting that the Asian Games performance will change the minds of a few.

“I would say 90 per cent of the athletes who have made use of it have won medals. Those who are not making use of it haven’t won. So the data is obvious,” Pandit said.

WAR IN UKRAINE TRIGGERED THE MOVE

India to obtain more self-propelled guns

SUDHI RANJAN SEN
September 29

INDIA IS PLANNING to add more self-propelled long range artillery to its arsenal after officials conducted a study indicating their effectiveness in shaping Russia’s war in Ukraine.

The South Asian country wants to obtain another 400 of these guns, which would make the equipment about a sixth of all artillery pieces in the Indian army, according to officials aware of the details, who asked not to be named because of the sensitivity of the issue.

The war in Ukraine has made India only the latest country to reevaluate its armory, preparedness for war and priorities on the battlefield. Officials cited an Indian military study showing that long range artillery with mobility is effective in influencing battle outcomes. Counter-strikes by the enemy are more likely to destroy guns in static positions, the officials said, citing the study.

A majority of India’s 100 self-propelled guns are deployed along a 3,488 kilometre (2,167 mile) disputed border with China. —BLOOMBERG
