A silent Surat: No orders, dormant looms and no diamond polishing

The final part of the series looks at how industries are waiting for demand to bounce back

WUJ BHARGA
Surat, 29 May

A run Thwait, 42, is a powerloom worker who knows nothing about designer carvings that are manufactured for ordinary work on fabrics, silk, and dress material. But with Surat emptied by an exodus of workers, employers are hiring unskilled labourers like Thwait, who, in turn, is relieved to earn ₹250 per day.

"My wife and I don't have any money left to go home to Uttar Pradesh. At least the daily wage is something," said Thwait. His employer Rashidkot Kotadiya is managing with unskilled labour to keep his weaving unit in the Klapipodara industrial area on the outskirts of Surat going. "Almost all skilled workers have left. We have had to hire unskilled workers like Thwait to ensure we service pending orders. But once that is over, we don't know when new orders will come," said Kotadiya.

Unlike the bulk of the weaving industry in Surat, which runs on simple power looms, making about 25 million metres of grey cloth per day in the pre-Covid era, Kotadiya is one of the few weavers who also has waterjet jacquard machines that roll out ready designer colour fabrics instead of grey fabric. Of his 4R workers, only four have stayed back to work on just 12 of his 124 machines.

Just when Surat's textile industry thought it was recovering from demeritisation and GST, the entire textile value chain, from spinning yarn and weaving to processing fabric and wholesale trading, has been pulverised again by the two-month long lockdown. It is now walking awkwardly for the retail sector to open.

While retail markets in other cities may have opened, the wholesale trading markets on the Ring Road of Surat, however, are deserted. "Unless the wholesale markets open and orders start, operating the rest of the textile value chain becomes meaningless," said Jitu Vahariya, president of the South Gujarat Textile Processors' Association.

"If the machines are shut, workers who have stayed back will leave for their home states. We have to keep the machines running to convince them there is work," said Babubhai Sojitra of

A lone worker engaged in daily maintenance of waterjet jacquard machines in the hope of resumption of a weaving unit in Klapipodara area of Surat

SNAPSHOT, IN NUMBERS

1.5 million migrant workers from Bihar, Odisha, and Jharkhand call Surat home

60% have gone back to their home states

675,000 left by Shramik trains

₹1,000-5,000 monthly wages paid to textile workers for two months to settle workers against ₹15,000-20,000

99% of synthetic

textile units shut, bringing production to a standstill

450 textile processing units in the state

600,000 power looms in Surat, of which only 1% are operational

2.5 million metres per day was the state's textile capacity post-demeritisation and GST

100 of the 6,000 diamond polishing units operating at sub-optimal capacity

₹30,000-40 loss estimated to diamond industry due to 2 months of lockdown

100,000 of 700,000 employed workers are back at diamond units in Surat

Sojitra Textiles, a unit in Laskarna. Of the 25,000 workers employed in the Laskarna area, only 150-300 remain.

Typically, textile workers here are relatively better off as they earn on a piece rate basis of around ₹2-per metre, amounting to average monthly salaries ranging from ₹15,000 to ₹20,000. But those figures are history now. Power loom worker Ratanrajyay Ram, 48, in Laskarna, has been paid ₹1,000 in the last two months as against his normal salary of ₹18,000.

"The owner has provided food but almost all work orders say they can only settle our full accounts once payment resumes after the textile market opens," said Kant, who has stayed back to recover his dues from his employer before leaving for home in Odisha. "Once

I leave, I don't intend to come back. I will work in my fields," he said, despite two decades in the city.

Sojitra said employers were ready to manage amidst the virus if the retail markets in containment zones were opened so that payment cycles could begin, allowing them to begin paying wages.

The diamond industry, too, is crawling back to work with a handful of units beginning to polish rough diamonds to fulfil pre-lockdown orders. It has been less severely impacted than the textile industry.

"Over 40 per cent of the workforce has left, unlike textiles, 90 per cent of our workers comprise skilled operators from different parts of the state," said Dinesh Navadiya, regional chairman of

Gems & Jewellery Export Promotion Council

Unlike the textile industry, which is waiting for wholesale markets to open, the diamond industry is waiting for air travel to resume so that rough diamonds can be imported and polished diamonds exported.

Unless imports resume, there will be no new orders. Smaller units such as Vidura Gems in Varadaha are merely servicing orders that they had received before the lockdown. Owner Mohan Chantala, sitting in his dimly lit unit polishing diamonds with colleagues, said he is in no hurry to get all his workers back.

"We have paid a part sum of 45,000 each against their usual salaries of ₹15,000-20,000 for the past two months. But once the current order is serviced which will hardly take another 15 days, we don't know when new orders will come. Hence, we are not calling our workers back," said Chantala.

Of the 6,000 diamond polishing units employing over 700,000 workers and clocking up an annual turnover of ₹1.8 trillion, not even 100 units have reopened, say industry sources. Based on diamond exports worth ₹25,000 crore in the months of April and May 2019, sources estimate a ₹30,000 crore loss to the industry during the lockdown.

The bitter job is going around among the few workers in Surat these days that they are outnumbered by employers. Some, like textile worker Nilambar Behera, have stayed on, in Vipinagar. He has been trying to persuade workers he knows to return from Odisha and restart work, but he hasn't had much luck.

Workers know they will return to a difficult situation. The rooms where they used to stay are unavailable. Landlords had given them an ultimatum when they couldn't find the rent so that they could pay other tenants who could pay. Even if they had a room to return to, few have the money to buy a train ticket back to Surat.

Behera knows workers who, as they tried to leave Surat, were duped by touz who took their savings. Behera lost his savings too, which is why he performs stayed back in Surat. "Earning nothing but only because of free food at a nearby temple gives me," said Behera.
